THE HEATED SPELL.

This part of the country has experienced a heated spell the past week, and anything of a specially unpleasant character, and decidedly refreshing alongside of what the East has endured, yet a heated spell for this locality. But now it is over. We will have warm days and cool nights as before, but the days will not be so hot, and the nights will be cooler than for some time yet. The change was inaugurated on Saturday night and confirmed on Sunday evening. Saturday night the clouds gathered fast and heavy, and the Lake received the first showy electrical storm that was to cross "the back" of the hot weather. A half-hour shower caused the big crowd at Saltair to hurry to the closed cars and under cover at the great pavilion; and later a slight installment of rain reached over the entire valley. Then last evening an hour's rain was a most refreshing relief in cooling and freshening the atmosphere. This was a welcome inauguration of the more moderate weather of autumn, which still is warm enough to suit pleasure seekers in spending some time in the country or the mountains.

The changes here is welcome; but there can be no feeling of intense rejoicing such as must mark the East in the relief they are beginning to receive in the lowering temperature. It was quite interesting to note the longings expressed in eastern papers as they looked to the West for the cool wave which was promised by the weather bureau as traveling east from the Rockies at about 500 miles in twenty-four hours, and which brought new life as it were to the parched regions of the great plains and eastward to the Atlantic seaboard. It is gratifying to note that the change has come; and westerners will be satisfied to let easterners rejoice to their hearts' content, envying them neither their happiness nor the severe experience which preceded it. The summer climate of these mountains and vales, and of the other seasons also, is sufficiently exhilarating and comforting to dwellers here, in comparison with other parts, to suppress all tendency to grumbling because there is no actual occasion therefor.

CHINESE PATRIOTS.

A few days ago a dispatch gave as the reason why Li Hung Chang had all but abandoned his visit to the United States, that a secret society had been formed, with many adherents in San Francisco, for the purpose of assassinating the old statesman. The San Francisco Chronicle now contains an account of the alleged secret society, and according to this, it is the opposite of a revolutionary association with murderous tendencies. The purpose of the Hing Chang Wooey is said to be to unite the progressive element of the Chinese, at home and abroad, in a general effort to break down the barriers of conservatism and ignorance that separate the Chinese race from the rest of mankind and make progress very pretty impossible.

Concerning this movement it is stated that it was originated immediately after the close of the late war among the element of the Mandarin and official class of China, who felt keenly the humiliation of defeat. They organized as the Hung Hay Wooey, a title meaning the society for the strengthening of China, the central idea of which was mainly the reorganization and increase of China's military and naval power. This organization was reported by unfriendly officials to the emperor and he was at first disposed to crush it. But when more fully advised of its purpose he withdrew opposition to it. The society was then reorganized as the Hung Chu Wooey, and its purposes strengthened to include efforts for the political education and enlightenment of the people as a means of paving the way for progress in all directions. The Hing Chang Wooey, which means the society for the uplifting of China, is the name of the organization which has undertaken to spread the movement among the Chinese of other lands than China.

According to this account the society, instead of being hostile to the Li-Hung-Changian reform ideas, appears to be formed for the express purpose of withering their realization, and its existence should herald the dawn of a better day for the Chinese empire.

The report which is being circulated among the Chinese contains the following statement:

With millions of people and thousands of square miles of territory, China should endeavor to become a more powerful nation. The national system is corrupt. The morals of the nation have been degraded. Titles and offices are bought and sold. Bribery is carried on openly. The people are oppressed. Robbery, lust and famine are everywhere. Anarchy is universal. The people hate officers.

Because of her great natural resources China is wanted by the other powers with envious eyes as eagles and tigers watch their prey. The partitioning out of the empire seems inevitable. Those who see the danger cry out in despair. If the impending disaster can be averted and the integrity of the empire preserved, posterity will be saved from subjection to other nations.

Therefore, we hope to secure the cooperation of all patriots and enlightened Chinese in this organization for the uplifting of China.

Undoubtedly too old viceroy long ago was well advised as to the purposes of this society, and the change of his bravery relative to this country must have some other reason than that given in the dispatch above referred to. That it was announced shortly after his arrival in England may, or may not, be a mere coincidence.

But after all, it is possible that even a prolonged visit to the United States would have no practical results. The European powers have competed in improving displays. Russia had coronation festivities; Germany showed him a wonderful army and England an equally wonderful navy. We have a Chinese excursion set, but nothing barmy whenty, at a moment's notice, to impress our superiority upon the mind of an Oriental. The simplicity of Franco and not place him particularly. The competition for commercial advantages in China may perhaps refer to decided on a firmer basis than the good will of a frail diplomat, and Li Hung Chang's failure to stay here for some time can therefore hardly be considered an irreparable loss.

DISMISSED FOR HAZING.

The civilized sentiment of the country will find much satisfaction in the action of the secretary of war dismissing two cadets from West Point for hazing. The enormity in the order of dismissal, that hazing is cowardly and unmanning a soldier and gentleman, represents a conception of the practice that has failed to reach the brain of senior cadets through the channel of reason; but now that the official stamp has been affixed it is probable that the barbarities at the cadetship will cease. In passing the subject it may be remarked that the present official firmness against hazing is due to President Cleveland, who insists that in government institutions an leniency be shown to those who engage in the barbarous proceeding. If the President's action will permanently eliminate hazing practices from West Point, and set a natural sequence from other educational institutions where it has prevailed, he will have earned the gratitude of the people in an important particular.

THE MILLIN INCIDENT.

The dispatches announced the death, on Thursday evening, of Sir John Everett Millais, Great Britain's leading artist of the latter part of this century. He was not a very old man, being but sixty-seven years of age; but for half a century he has been prominently before the artist world, and at his death was president of the Royal Academy, in which institution he began his studies at the age of eleven years. His first picture to draw special attention was of an American historical event—Pizarro seizing the Inca of Peru. This was in 1849; and after forty years of painting on notable subjects he was created a baronet at the request of Mr. Gladstone, his portrait of the latter being considered one of his best efforts to that line of art.

A notable incident in connection with Lord Millais's late experience is the setting aside of a rule which has prevailed in the court of Queen Victoria up to the present year. This rule was that no divorced woman could be received there, no matter how innocent or how wronged. Lady Millais was a divorced woman when she became wife of the painter, and recently she was received at court. Further than this, she has been the wife of the great John Ruskin. She was a beautiful girl, and Ruskin was much her senior when they married. Their life was not in perfect accord as far as their sympathies went, although there is no record of them ever being a disagreement. Ruskin as a writer and art critic did much to make Millais famous, and engaged him to paint Mrs. Ruskin's picture. The Ruskins had no children; the young wife fell in love with the painter; Ruskin learned the true condition, a divorce was secured by the husband, and the divorced wife became Mrs. Millais, just in the middle of eight children. Her life has been one of entirely respectable, and she has secured happy with her second matrimonial venture.

The incident of the relaxation of the rule referred to is one of the indications of the change that is taking place in fashion in relation to social, family and religious matters. A quarter of a century ago such an incident would have invoked the sentiment of the people. Now it meets with general approval. There has never been a talent of slender attendant in Lady Millais, so far as her personal conduct was concerned; but she was a divorced wife, and a barrier was erected that was not applicable to a divorced husband. The more modern view is to give both sexes equal recognition, and it is just possible may develop to requisition of them equal responsibility before the law.

FAST BICYCLE RIDING.

The running down of three-year-old Irene Gray, on Sunday afternoon, by a careless bicycle rider, indicating what might prove a fatal injury, may not have the desired effect of putting an end to bicycle "scorching" on the sidewalks, but it certainly should cause the police department to give earlier attention more attention than this time on. There is not a day passes in this fine summer weather but the city ordinance is violated by bicyclists in the business part of the town, to say nothing of the disregard for regulations shown in the suburbs and very many of these violations occur in the presence of policemen on duty.

No sensible person wants to place any unreasonable restriction on bicycle riders. The wheel is a great public benefit and has come to stay for a considerable time at least as an essential modern convenience. But the reckless speed at which young men and boy bicyclists especially go over street crossings and along sidewalks is a continual nuisance to life and limb that ought to be removed. The law on that point is not all that should be, but its enforcement as it now is would be a vast improvement, in giving people protection and relieving the better class of cyclists from the odium that now attaches in the minds of many people.

WEYLER'S CRUELTY.

If the story told of Captain General Weyler's cruelty in Cuba in connection with the recent suicide of the nephew of General Ochando is true, there is likely to be another change in officials at Havana soon. Weyler's alleged compulsion of the young lieutenant's self-murder has caused Ochando, who was chief of staff in Cuba, to resign and return to Madrid. There he will lay his side of the story before the people, and Weyler probably will be given a chance to clear himself of the charge of unnecessarily and inhuman conduct. There was a time in his career when he could have done this easily; but that time has passed. The Spaniards themselves are not satisfied with the captain-general's failure to suppress the insurrection, and the popular judgment is already showing a tendency against him. The Ochando affair may be enough to throw the balance with such force that Weyler will be recalled and will go out of office with the disgrace that attaches to human nature. If he has been guilty as alleged, there will be few to pity him; if he is innocent, he is one of the most abused men of the day. This latest incident ought to establish the truth beyond question.

Nervous debility is a common complaint, cured by strong medicine. The best medical treatment for loss of strength is a convalescent course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla to cleanse and invigorate the blood. This being accomplished, nature will do the rest.

"Cousin, does minister to a mind diseased?" asks Macbeth. Certainly, my lord; the condition of the mind depends largely, if not solely, on the condition of the stomach, liver, and bowels. Use all of these complaints Ayer's Pills are the most consummate thing on earth."
