IN SOUTHERN UTAH.

A Travelist's Difficulties.—Sandy Bids.—The Sevier River.

Editor Evening News:

From my experience during the past twelve days I have come to the conclusion that a winter trip from Salt Lake City to the extreme southern part of our Territory is anything but pleasant, but that it nevertheless can be accomplished, even with a comfortable carriage.

In the morning of February 16, 1892, which happened to be a cold, misty day, I left the capital of Utah, which was enveloped in a thick, chilly fog, while the ground was covered with snow, ice and frozen mud. In traveling through Salt Lake and Utah counties I found the roads to certify good part of the way, although muddy and hidden up in many places; but after passing Santaquin and until I reached the noted Cedar Ridge which divides Juab from Sanpete county (about two miles of Levan) I found myself encountering the roads loaded under extreme difficulties. The mud in places was simply awful and at short points, where there was no frost in the ground, I had to break track for miles together, there being but a very little travel on the road I took part of the way. To add to my discomfort, I lost my way traveling after dark from Nephi to Levan, and instead of arriving at the latter place at the expected time to receive a kind reception from old friends, I found myself at a deserted ranch near the foot of the mountains, but finally made my way to a sheep herder's camp within the road left, and there learned what gave me a degree of momentary satisfaction, that besides myself some thirty or forty others of the traveling public had been there before me having taken the wrong road. Now, if the road commissioners of Juab county would just go to the small expense of putting up a guide board of some kind at the point where the road forks a few miles south of Nephi, they would not incur the unpleasantness of being called such hard names as some of the travelers on the road, when they get angry or disappointed, are occasionally uttering utterance to. After crossing Cedar Ridge I found myself in a warmer country, and the roads dry and sandy, nearly all the way from Levan on arriving at Gunnison I witnessed the people engaged in spring plowing. Pushing up over a small belt of rock, I arrived at Richfield in time to attend the late conference held at that place. After the conference, I held (again) meeting with the Richfield Saints in Richfield, Elsinor and Monroe, agreeable to the wishes of Apostle A. H. Lund.

Before leaving Monroe on the morning of February 25th, a snow storm set in and while crossing the mountains in going over to Marysville, the snow was quite blinding, and the traveling also became heavy and tedious, and I had to make a new track through the newly fallen snow. We at Marysville (a junction in Circleville, and also through the long canyon above the latter place, the roads were nearly all icy and mud, but became better as I proceeded towards Panguitch. From this place the roads continues up the south fork of the river for twelve miles to a point where a left-hand road takes off to the east and leads through Red Canyon and the "East Fork" to Cannonville and Escalante, while the right-hand road continues up the river three miles further to Wilson's ranch, where I stopped over night and received kind treatment from one of the family who resides there.

The next morning I started off for what I thought, namely Dixie. Right miles over a muddy and rocky road brought me to Hatch's ranch, which consists of a cluster of houses nicely situated at the junction of Mammoth and Asay's creeks, which two streams form the Sevier river. Proceeding five miles further in the west, passing up a [illegible] canyon, through [illegible] and nine miles more in the canyon I reached Asay's ranch, another cluster of houses situated at the junction of Asay's and Mineral creeks. These three streams, namely, Hatch's and Asay's, together with a few hamlets, the who live in a scattered condition over different stream, joining into the main tributaries of the Sevier river, taking to the Panguitch road, but expect soon to have a ward organization of their own, as the Saints are now connected with Panguitch ward as an organization. At present meetings and Sunday schools, as well as day schools, are being held in all these places, and the people seem to be healthy and cheerful, notwithstanding their secluded situations, as near the tops of the mountains.

I have now, on the road Sevier trips, followed the main windings of the Sevier river, and from its head to where it disappears in the Sevier sink, or lake, in Millard county, and have learned from actual observations that that Sanpete stream is the largest and most important river that Utah possesses as her exclusive property. All the other noted streams, except Bonneville, Weber and Provo Bayou, which are shown on the map of Utah, rise beyond the limits of our Territory (Snake and Bear River, etc.), while the largest of all, the Green, Grand and Colorado Rivers, simply pass through on their way to the Pacific Ocean. But the Sevier River, which rises on the south slope of the south rim of the basin in lofty mountain chains, together with its tributaries, supplies more settlements with water for culinary and irrigation purposes than any other stream in Utah, the Weber not excepted. Thus we find on the south fork, besides the three small settlements that I have already named, Panguitch and Circleville; on the east fork there is Marion ward, including a number of ranches above, on Otter Creek, which is a tributary of the East Fork, at Beaverville, Kanabeton and two other small settlements (all in Otter Valley), besides ranches. At the point where the East and South Fork unite are the two junctions (east and west), the county seat of Piute county, and Marysvale, further down the river. Then, in the lower Sevier Valley we find the following string of settlements which are what land agents term the Sevier Valley: Monroe, Elsinore, Inverness, Annabelle, Richfield, Vermillion, Aurora, Salina and Redmond. On the Sanpete River (and its tributaries) which puts into the Sevier, near Gunnison, we have the settlements of Nephi, Fairview, Mount Pleasant, Spring City, Fountain Green, Moroni, Water, Chester, Ephraim, Manti, Pettyville, Mayfield and Gunnison. Below the latter place Salt Creek, and farther down "Beaver Town," in Juab county, and Leamington, Oasis and Hinckley in Millard complete the list of settlements on the Sevier River, the latter being the future "City of Kanosh," which is to come of creation on the extensive level and fertile tract of country lying north of Deseret. The two upwards of forty settlements or hamlets which expend on the waters of the Sevier river and its numerous tributaries by their existence.

From Asay's ranch, about twenty-three miles south of Panguitch the main road leads up Mineral Creek, two miles to Mineral Ranch, and this pass it is five miles to the summit or dividing ridge, or the Rim of the Basin. This distance I had to travel through snow three feet deep, but I finally reached the top with my horse in a very fatigued condition. Here I had expected to remount a new mountain opening up to the south, or a kind of a "jump off," down into Dixie land similar to the place where I was compelled to dismount from a small cart load pass in going down to Cannonville, but in this I was disappointed, instead of ascending the sandy South, I was shown a trail which led down over some mountains, and in winding down a canyon through which I must cross a small stream leaping over the ice and rocks, which proved to be the head waters of one of the tributaries of the Rio Virgin. I was soon to discover that Dixie, where the trees are already in bloom, was yet a long way off, and when I arrived at Bishop Graham McDonald's ranch seven miles down the slope from the rim of the basin I was very thankful for the privilege of putting up for the night, although still within the limits of the snow and mountain plows.

This morning I continued my journey down the canyon for a distance of ten miles and reached the new little town of Glendale, where I commenced my historical labors.
