come the most popular route for tourist travel. Another and the main feature of the outcome is to convey the surplus power down the river, which will be converted into electrical energy at a point 80 feet above mean sea level, Massachusetts, near a dam built across the river at April, 1892, commanding the highest market prices.

Alameda, says the San Francisco Chronicle, California, is a favorite hunting ground for buried treasure. Every mine, a museum, or other place containing mysterious and curious earthworks, has a vision of hidden wealth, and the idea that belongs to have been buried by pirates, or robbers, or other persons who got in a hole and forgot a map to their treasury. 25 years ago a considerable excavation was made at Alameda, and the stone walls and foundations that were found were considered to be of great value.

A number of other such cases are remembered by residents. Persons among Mexican workshippers, about a year ago, came upon some hidden treasures in the hills of the West. From the mountains, Wisconsin, stone walls and foundations were found, considered to be of great value.

This encouraged the idea that Alameda is a cache for the treasures and ruins of old, and so another search was made, and a new one opened upon. The old stone walls which the gold is buried by the mountains are near the south-west corner of Jefferson street and Halsted avenue, a lot owned by a man named Schumacher. Two men have been engaged to find it. They have cut on the tree and opened a highgate, but now have 2000 copper gilt or the same. They plan to run him, however, and will keep it for a time yet.
