TO SANTIAGO DE CUBA

On the First Passenger Steamer to Make the Trip Since the Taking of the Town—Scenes and Incidents—Glimpses of Guantanamo and Siboney—Six Hundred Down With the Fever.

Special correspondence of the "Deseret News."

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 1, 1898.

On the first passenger steamer to enter the port of Santiago in America or Europe, and the third boat, of course, of any description, to enter the city since the surrender of the city, I am in Santiago de Cuba. Of course, there are lots of things I could write about, which would be of interest, but which would not be permissible. Naturally, the department of the Philadelphia created a sensation in Santiago de Cuba. Some years ago, the Philadelphia in New York harbor was the cynosure of all eyes. Now, the Philadelphia, minus her mast, is in Santiago. As she passed the entrance, she looked as if she had seen hard service. Her hull was battered and bruised, and her mast was missing. Her appearance was the signal for a demonstration from the people on the shore, who had watched her approach with great interest
