Foot Ball and the Academy.

NEXT week another game of ball will be played between the University and Brigham Young Academy teams. We have seen some doubt as to whether the Brigham Young Academy eleven would play any more. The following letter from President Cluff of the academy explains the matter:

PROVO CITY, Utah, Nov. 23, 1896.

Manager Foot Ball Team, Brigham Young Academy:

Dear Brother—In answer to yours of recent date asking whether or not the game of foot ball will be permitted among the students of the academy, and in which you express a desire to be in harmony with the views of President Carson and other members of the board, I will say that your letter was submitted to President Carson with an explanatory letter from me. His reply, which is now before me, shows that while he is not saying to any game that gives recreation and promotes better physical development, he is strongly opposed to the barbarous and brutal way in which some of these games are played.

After due consideration, therefore, by members of the faculty to which Supt. Karl G. Maeser and President C. W. Penrose took part, the following conclusion was unanimously adopted: There will be no objection to your playing football upon your associates to so that the game can and will be played without that roughness and brutality which is dangerous alike to life and limb. The faculty, however, reserve the right to prohibit this, or release any game when such is shown to be dangerous to the players.

Trusting this will be satisfactory to you, I remain very respectfully,

H. CLUFF JR.

Notes and Personals.

Mrs. Bell Nelson of this city is calling for a little 12-year-old boy who gives the name of George Baker. He was picked up in the street about three weeks ago in a starving condition, and says he came from Denver where his mother died when he was a years of age, and his father was killed in a railway accident two years later. Mrs. Nelson is anxious to find some good family who will care for the little lad.

William F. Wiesnutt of Springville died yesterday morning from tipha fever. He was an old and respected citizen and leaves a wife and ten children to mourn his loss. The funeral will be held in the Springville meeting house Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Yesterday morning about twenty young ladies and gentlemen, members of the Brigham Young Academy Choral society left over the R. G. W. railway for Ephraim, where they gave a concert in the evening. This evening they appear in Manti and may give a second concert there tomorrow evening.

A sad loss been both to Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Bullock. All well.

Judge Durrheerry's campaign expenses were $22.50.

CIDER MAKING.

How the New Process Differs From the Old.

The modern cider mill is constructed with an idea of economy in labor and strength. No longer is hand power used, and it is rarely that the horse treadmill is the motive power. Steam from an engine which at other seasons of the year would be used for a threshing machine or a saw mill furnishes the power. In the larger mills the apples are thrown by the wagon load into a flat box outside and are carried to the floor above by means of an endless belt, which dumps them into the grinder. From the grinder the pomace, ground much finer than in the old way, drops into the press.

The press is built on the same general principles as it was in the olden times, but on different lines. There is a long platform with the tank for the cider underneath. On the platform is a heavy truck on wheels, traveling along steel rails. The truck has a slatted bottom and is covered with cider cloth, a heavy quality of cotton cloth. The pomace drops down from the grinder upon the truck, and when enough has accumulated a slatted cover is put on with another cider cloth, and more pomace is deposited. This is repeated until the pile has grown four or five feet, with alternate layers of slats, cider cloth and pomace. The truck is shoved over to the press proper, the top pieces are put in place, and the screw is turned on the screws for the final pressure. The cider comes out in torrents and flows into the gutters around the platform and into the tank beneath, where it is strained through a covering cloth. When the cider is to be put into barrels, the engine is again set in motion, and it is pumped out, with a regular one-inch pump, so that the quantity passing through. A good sized cider mill of modern construction can turn out from 60 to 100 barrels of cider a day and with less labor than the old hand mill maker produced the single barrel. The cider is often made on commission or for custom trade, the farmer bringing in his stock apples and having so much cider made up, some the New York firm, authority for the foregoing description.

Wintering Bees.

A woman bookkeeper writing in The American Bee Journal says:

We lose less than formerly in cellar wintering. The reason for losing bees, we think, is mainly the large entrance we allow in fitting them up for the bees, or our hives are not packed but stinged at the season, any way to give a large opening at the bottom so that the frost does not be easily carried out by the bees, so as not to clog their entrance. When they have a small entrance, the bees that die in the hive stop down, and clog the entrance, and the bees can not get out to die. They become uneasy and restless and eat more, which causes them to become wintered and die. The dead bees remaining in the hive would decay, often causing the death of the whole colony.

A Handy Bug Holder.

A bug holder is a convenience on any farm and is easily constructed from what cost is needed. There are bug holders and bug holders, but a New York farmer after considerable experiment has discovered a holder that gives entire satisfaction. He describes it as follows in The Farm and Fireside:

Procure a piece of 3 inch plank 30 inches long and wide as you can get it. Bore 1¼ inch holes in the plank 24 inches apart. Then get two sticks 1 foot 8 inches long, of some tough wood—green poles will do—which should be about as large as a man's wrist. Shave these sticks to fit into the holes in the plank and shave about 10 inches of the upper ends so they will fit tightly into a three-quarter inch hole.

Now make two blocks of hard wood 4½ inches long and 3 inches square. Bore a three-quarter inch hole in each one the end. Set the corners for a 6 inch circle and saw off two half circles on an inch board; then saw them out with a compass saw and nail one of these circular pieces on each block close to the end, as shown at A. These circular pieces should be one inch thick each way, and they should have about three small tacking nails left sticking out a quarter inch to keep the bag from slipping off. It is the aging of the two long sticks that holds the bug tight. The blocks can be slipped up or down for bags of different lengths.

Loss From Summer Fallow.

In a bulletin from the Minnesota station it is contended that summer fallowing causes the loss of great quantities of humus and of nitrogen, which evaporate rapidly in summer fallowing. Green crops for turning under are strongly recommended instead of summer fallowing.

Growing Children

SOME CHILDREN grow rapidly, others slowly. Some children are healthy, others do not and do them sickly good. The former are healthy because they are healthy, and the latter are sickly because they are sickly. A sight sell, or some ailment, has weakened their other from every body.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites, but the remedy for growing children. It gives sound body, makes strong limbs, healthy nerves.

Horses Kick

in self-defence. It is their most vigorous form of protest against the abuse of flies. Horses that are not molested do not kick on their show. Discomfort often one such rule in ignorance of the danger that is made to kick.
