UTAH FLOUR AGAIN.

For Pastry, That Product Surely Leads the World.

Editor Deseret News.

The question of which is the strongest flour seems to bother a great many of our bakers and pastry cooks, but few of them know, or if they do know it they don't seem to wish it known, that Utah flour for fine puff paste such as vol-au-vents, tarts, oyster patties, sausage rolls, veal and ham pies and a hundred other kinds of pastry, leads the world's flours.

Almost every plain baker who has the making of a plain tea cent pie can tell you this if he chooses to do so; yet in spite of this, our flours by some are said to be poor, especially for the making of bread. This is a practical ... [illegible] Utah wheat is shipped to Port Costa, Cal., and reloaded into sailing clippers, its principal destination being Liverpool. From there it goes to the great flouring mills of Messrs. Alex and Robert Tod, of Leith and Glasgow, Scotland, who grind it into flour and then it has the market for pastry flour, it commanding the highest market value, and is mentioned by pastry cooks and confectioners of the first order as being the very best for their especial use. ... [illegible]

For wholeness, Utah flour leads the world; while it is true that years ago the Minneapolis flour was known to be ahead of the Hungarian flour, as is well known to the trade, today Utah flour leads the Minnesota and Dakota products for whiteness and purity for the making of pastry. ... [illegible]

Our wheat has to be sent away over ten thousand miles by land and sea, before it receives its just recognition at ... [illegible]

This is indeed of importance to those, for if this flour is the best for pastry, it is reasonable to suppose the wheat that makes this flour ought to be worth more than what is usually paid for it, ... [illegible]

What about Utah's best flour now? Who wants to know anything about this? ... [illegible]

Respectfully, Jos. J. Giles.

Personal.

Captain De Lamar, the millionaire miner and capitalist, is in the city, but not in connection with building the proposed railway to the coast, as some persons hoped for.

J. D. Thomas, connected for a considerable time past with the Anaconda copper works, has been in the city for several days. He will return to Montana early next week.

Funeral.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Ann Hanks Brighton will take place at the Eleventh ward meeting house Sunday, at 12 o'clock. Friends invited to attend.

Visiting Home and Friends.

W. G. Newson, a Salt Lake boy, who for the last ten or twelve years has been a resident of San Francisco and an employe in the operating department of Nolan Bros.' shoe factory, has returned to this city and is visiting his parents, other relatives and friends. Today he called at the News office and shook hands with old-time associates, having been employed on this paper as pressman twenty years ago. He will be best remembered as "Billy" Newson, the famous harmonica player. Next week he goes to St. Louis with a view to locating there. His family in the meantime will remain in Salt Lake.

Sunday Schools.

Superintendents of the Latter-day Saints Sunday schools of the city are requested to hold no session of their schools tomorrow (March 3rd) but are cordially invited with their aids, teachers and pupils, so far as practicable, to be present at the meeting of the Stake Conference in the Tabernacle.

The Engine Room of an Ocean "Flyer."

Let us look now into the engine room, the real heart of the vessel, where all the steam brought from the nine huge boilers hurls itself against pistons in six huge cylinders, three to turn the propeller on the port side, three to turn the one on the starboard side. Of these three pairs of cylinders, the first pair are forty-three inches in diameter, and work a pressure of eleven atmospheres. The second pair are sixty-seven inches in diameter, with a pressure of four atmospheres. The third pair are low pressure cylinders, one hundred and six inches in diameter, with one atmosphere pressure and a vacuum equal to working power to one atmosphere. Many visits are necessary to the engine-room before one becomes familiar enough with the place to appreciate its marvels. The first effect is merely stunning. One understands nothing, fails to trace any sequence of cause and effect, and only recognizes a stupendous turning of giant cranks, a going up of enormous masses of metal, all bright and oily, a wilderness of immense steel stanchions, levers, and cylinders, great wheels, great curving pipes, great pistons, the whole weighing hundreds of tons, and all apparently turning and twisting without reckoning of end.

Three men, the engineer, his assistant, and a greaser, are the whole force required at one time in the engine-room, and they never seem to be particularly busy. When all is well, as it always is, the engineer has nothing more to do than turn a little wheel now and then, or open and shut some valves. Quite likely it's play one would think. It seems ridiculous that he should have such power ... [illegible] the throttle ... a dial [illegible] ... Having served its purpose in condensing the steam, this salt water is discharged overboard ... [illegible]

Here is the little wheel, only a foot in diameter, which will stop or start the great ship by a few turns. A woman could work it.

Beside this wheel is the telegraph connection with the bridge where the captain stands, a needle indicating on the dial the order to be executed. ... [illegible] "half," "slow," "stop," ... When the needle points ... [illegible]—McClure's Magazine for March.
