DOCTORED MINERAL WATERS.

Results of an Investigation Recently Made by the Academy de Medecine.

The Academy de Medecine of Paris, as the result of a close investigation of the truth in the so called "natural" mineral waters of France, has arrived at the following conclusions, which are put in the form of recommendations to the legislative bodies:

First—That the sale of natural mineral waters implanted with supplementary gases should not be allowed.

Second—Every application for permits to carry on the business of the sale of natural mineral waters should be accompanied by certificates made before the proper authorities that the water labelled or to be labelled as the application have not been so prepared, e.g., by supplementary carbonic acid—and by a further certificate on the part of the owner of the source or of the owner of the water that no one has had recourse to supplementary gasification.

Third—All imported mineral waters of water should be made straight and should be carried at least one year in bottles. They should be accompanied by the certificate of the competent authorities, and further, all bottles and receptacles should be thoroughly purified, and all importers of any description should be required before they are offered for sale.

Fourth—These regulations should be at once imposed, and all proprietors of springs of mineral waters should be forced to put them in practice within three months from date.

In France the recommendations of the academy carry about the weight of an order, and there is no little doubt but that the above regulations will soon be in force, so far as concerned waters for home consumption are concerned. If they are made to apply to all waters, those for export as well as those for consumption, there will be a sorrowful falling off in exports, as it is well known that every single bottle of foreign so called "mineral" carbonated water—not merely those of France, but those of Germany, Austria and other countries—that now arrives pure charged with supplementary gas. Not merely this, but nearly every one of them is doctored otherwise to an extent that should prevent them entirely from the category of natural waters.

Some of the great mineral water purveyors annually export to America about millions of bottles of water in view of the output of their springs. By a strange ruling of our custom officials these manufactured mineral waters have been allowed for years past to come into this country as "natural waters," and thus not merely enter into competition with our domestic products, natural and manufactured, but to "hold the age" on the latter as "the product of nature's laboratory," a fitting of great power among the unthinking multitude.—National Druggist.

THE ABSENTEE VIZEROY.

The Irish People Have Just Cause For Complaint Against Lord Houghton.

The latest grievance discovered by the Parnellites is well founded and is calculated to win them general popular sympathy in Ireland. It is that the lord lieutenant is an absentee. It is a fact that Lord Houghton spends as little time as possible in the country from which he draws his salary of £20,000 a year. The Irish people could very well do without his lordship, but they naturally grieve at business not as well as pleasure is too that great money be spent out of the country, especially as they have provided it out of funds some too sample at the best times.

Lord Houghton is enormously wealthy, having inherited the bulk of the big fortune of his uncle, the late Lord Crewe, in addition to his own previously large income. He has no personal need of the viceroy's salary, and, if money can be relied upon, has no care for the office. It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that he is contemplating resigning. It is believed that the proposed successor of Lord Houghton will be Lord Dunraven, who recently had an altercation with the Irish land commission a few weeks ago. The government now has some difficulty in finding a Liberal peer qualified and willing to accept the Irish viceroyalty, dignified sinecure, though it is.—New York Sun's London Letter.

HER BONES ARE BREAKING.

Miss Sarah Cook of Fall River is Suffering From a Singular Disease.

Five years ago Miss Sarah Cook of Fall River was looking into a womanhood that promised an exceptional example of feminine beauty. Today she is a bedridden invalid in whose every prospect in New England is taking an interest. She is suffering from osteomalacia, a rare disease of the bones.

Her parents were both Canadians, and they have another daughter who is also a beautiful lass and a splendid specimen. About 18 months ago Miss Sarah complained of a pain in her spine in her left thigh. While about to step in a train her thigh bone snapped at the socket, and she was carried into a hospital.

The manner of the accident was so simple that the attending physician's curiosity was at once aroused. After some of the most expert care had failed to heal the fracture it was decided that an operation was necessary to prolong the girl's life. The patient was in a shattered condition, but the operation was successful. It transpired at the time that the bone was of a very unusual composition, but no such results as were followed were expected.

After the wound had been healed and while she was being carried to a hospital bed the doctors and others were astounded by the breaking of a bone in her right thigh caused by the exertion of turning in bed. The fracture was found incurable, and for eight years she has been confined to the bed. The bones each broke, and the girl was taken home. The general health did not improve, and she became a great sufferer. One of the surgeons at a Boston hospital, who knew of her case, visited in Fall River some months ago and spoke about it to the house surgeon.

Not many weeks ago, while the girl was feeling her bed in the act of turning, its strength, without the exposure of another, that right thigh bone again snapped about where it was previously broken. That operation was the year before last. A few weeks later
