The remains of an old man, supposed to have been dead some four months, were found several days ago by a party of hunters in the Piedmont hills, California. The effects taken from the body have been some identified as belonging to a man named Waldron. It is believed that he committed suicide while despondent.

Dave Cughanour, one of the owners of the Gold Hill mine, at Quartzburg, arrived in Boise city yesterday, says the Idaho Free Mineral. Mr. Cughanour brought with him a gold bar worth $750 which he disposed of at the United States assay office. The bar was the result of a two week's run on Gold Hill ore. The mine, he says, is looking better than it has for months. The water is now being pumped from the 600-foot level and work will be commenced to it the first of next week.

Mrs. Nellie Coburn, or Sullivan, whose mysterious disappearance created quite a sensation in a portion of Colorado a few months ago, has been heard from. She is now in Los Angeles, Cal., having eloped on the night of her arrival here with a bookmaker, whom she met on the train. William J. Coburn yesterday received a letter from her, "Dear Jacob," she writes, "I love you still, but please send my trunk." Mr. Coburn has not yet decided to comply with her request. The woman's appearance created no ripples in police circles.

William Macdonald, a seaman on the sailing tank Andrew Hicks, has brought suit in the United states district court at San Francisco against George Donaldson, her captain, and William Lewis, her owner, to recover $500 damages. He alleges that the captain put him in irons, kicked him in the face and tried him up for nearly eight hours. Afterward the captain put him in a dark place and kept him there for a days. A similar suit was brought against the same defendants last week by another sailor, who made practically the same charges against the captain.

Forsemo time past O. E. Frink of Broadway, says the Denver News, has been doing a most profitable butter business. It was his custom to procure the high medgreed oleomargarine, and having neatly repacked it, to peddle it about the city as a high country butter. In some way the authorities discovered his trade secret, and, as a consequence he was arrested yesterday afternoon by Deputy Marshal Rowe and taken before United States Commissioner Hinsdale on the charge of food adulteration. He pleaded not guilty, but being unable to furnish a bond in $1,000, he went to jail to await trial.

Governor Willey of Idaho on Tuesday issued an order revoking his proclamation of July 12, 1892, declaring Shoshone county to be under martial law. The order was signed by himself as commander-in-chief J. N. G., and Adjutant General E. J. Curtis, and wired to Inspector General J. F. Curtis, who is now at Wallace. The day and hour for the other to go into effect was left blank, to be filled by the inspector general. In his order the governor said he was satisfied that a state of insurrection and rebellion no longer existed in Shoshone county and there was no further use for martial law, as the civil authorities could now uphold the dignity of the law and maintain peace.—Daily Statesman, Idaho.

Governor Willey of Idaho, has received a petition signed by over 100 of the leading citizens of Gibson's Ferry, asking him to issue an order calling to the reservation all Indians who are now hunting or loafing in that locality. The petition states that for months past bands of redskins, numbering from thirty to fifty, from Fort Hall reservation, have made Gibson's Ferry a hangout, greatly to the annoyance and detriment of the citizens of that place. The Indians are now, as the petition states, killing game in large quantities near Gibson's Ferry for the hides and hams. Many of the Indians have been so occupied for the greater portion of the summer. The governor immediately wrote Indian Agent Fisher to call the troublesome redskins back to the reservation.

Park city was startled Thursday morning when it became known that Mrs. Annie O'Connor, a bride of five weeks, had fallen into a well and drowned, and that her body had remained in the well from some time Wednesday afternoon until an early hour Thursday morning. Charles O'Connor, husband of the deceased, had been at work Tuesday and Tuesday night, and upon retiring Wednesday morning told his wife to wake him in time for a funeral which was to be held that day. She woke at 8:30 and noticing that it was too late for the funeral and supposing his wife had gone without him, went to sleep again. When he again woke it was 2 o'clock Thursday morning. As his wife was missing he became alarmed and noticed a switch which caused to the discovery of her remains in a well from which a number of families draw their drinking water. The husband's grief is said to have been terrible to behold.

James S. Roe, a bartender about Dick Shannon twice in Market street, Denver, on Tuesday. One bullet passed through the fleshy part of Shannon's neck, the other scattered the bones in his right wrist. Roe was arrested; Shannon was sent to the county hospital for treatment. On Monday night Georgie Carroll, alias Ida, mistress of James Hole, took an over dose of morphine, which nearly resulted fatally. She purchased the drug from Shannon, who is known as "Morphine Dick," and is a notorious fence. Roe heard of Shannon's part in the attempted tragedy of Monday night and early Tuesday morning started out to hunt for him with a big schoolcoder in his pocket. He had almost given up the hunt when he went into Mike Market street, in the Good room at this place he found his man. Without saying a word Roe drew out his gun and exclaimed, "You —— morphine fiend, I am going to make you hop." A shot went with this remark, but it missed its mark. Shannon jumped to his feet and ran for the back door. Before he could get out of range Roe fired twice more, striking his enemy each time and letting him fall to the ground. Only a hemorrhage prevented his flying at the man writhing in pain behind him, and once a whirlwind Roe was saved. He made no effort to escape and surrendered to the police. He is charged with assault to kill and the police think he held no ax accessory.—Denver News.

Two decisions were rendered on the 14th inst. at Helena, Montana, by Judge Knowles of the United States district court, involving the condition of the Northern Pacific land grant. The first decision gives the railroad possession of McLean's Park addition to Helena, consisting of eighty acres and valued at $6,000. William McLean opened the land in 1872, but had not perfected title to it when he died. His widow made application to enter the homestead of her husband and her application was sustained through the land office, including the secretary of the interior. The public space of the Northern Pacific was filed in 1887 and included the disputed piece of land. Judge Knowles holds that the grant to the railroad company conveyed to it legal title to the odd sections designated and that were not mineral lands, to the date of the selection, whereupon the government had title. McLean lost his title by not perfecting his prior entry in 1872. In the second case a section of land in the Butte Boot valley was in dispute since 1872. Patents have been issued to 3,240 acres of the Flathead Indians, who refused to accept the land, fearing inter tribal relations would be severed. These lands were not claimed at the time that the railway company filed its map of definite location, but were reserved by the terms of a treaty made in 1855. Several settlers filed on the lands and obtained patents. They are confirmed in their possession.
