Serious Trouble—Railroad Cars Set on Fire—Searching for Men at Work.

PENNSYLVANIA, PA., June 22.—The Fifth and Sixteenth regiments and Sheridan troops, under command of Brigadier General John A. Wiley, reached here at 7 o'clock. The troops were marched at once to Walston, the scene of the trouble.

The soldiers surrounded Walston without a shot being fired except accidental discharge of a cavalryman's carbine. At Bell, Lewis & Co.'s lands, skirmish lines were formed and a careful search made for intoxicated strikers and rioters. They had disappeared. Early today crowds of foreigners were stationed on the hills overlooking the town. At the approach of the militia they ran into houses or hide for the woods.

This afternoon the coal company notified the foreigners to vacate the company's premises. Those refusing will be evicted. A collision is expected before long. Last night Hungarians and Italians raided the company stores at Walston and Adrian.

SALVATION ARMY WEDDING.

"Captain" Joseph Harrison to "Ensign" Clara Barnes.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Captain Joseph Harrison to Captain Clara D. Harrison, no cards.

These warriors of the Salvation army were married last night in the Forty-seventh street garrison. The marriage ceremony was performed by Commander Ballington Booth. The best man was Captain Peake, and the bridesmaid was Captain Davis. On the platform were many prominent officers of the army and the pretty young women dressed several of them, while the audience was crowded with enthusiastic admirers of both sexes.

It was a wedding ceremony as interesting as it was odd. While the auditorium was only almost to the point of riot at times, the proceedings were earnest and deeply religious. The barracks were heavily draped with flags of the union and the Salvation army. A sheet extended across the back of the platform on which was printed in great red letters: "For time and eternity tonight."

Commander Booth, a sweet faced and musical voiced little woman, delivered a short homily on marriage, and declared that those in the army were all for love and hope for money, she read several verses from the Bible, beginning, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want," and kept up a running comment and applause of the throng. Then she read the marriage articles, which declared that marriage should not interfere with the candidates in the army, but this, she explained, did not mean that they should ever be permanently separated. Then the candidates stepped forward with the best man and bridesmaid and each in turn repeated after Commander Booth the declaration of the Episcopal marriage service. After the ring had been slipped on the bride's finger they were pronounced man and wife "in the sense of God and the salvation army."

The ceremony was followed by a volley that threatened to lift the roof, a prayer and a united sing set to the tune of "Two little girls in blue."

UNDER THEOSOPHY'S WINGS

Disciples of the New Faith Will Take Care of Coxey's Army.

A Monastery to Be Set Up Near Gray Gables.—Predictions of Dire Disasters.

BUZZARDS BAY, MASS., June 22.—Henry A. Foulke, and Geo. Fulkinshin, of Philadelphia, president and secretary of the Mahatmas Navy, arrived here in order, as they say, to set up a monastery of Theosophists at Onset bay, a place about half from Gray Gables. But this is not all. Mr. Foulke says that he has arranged to bring Coxey's army here on a schooner as soon as Congress adjourns and that they will be encamped in a forest near at the head of Onset and Buttermilk bays.

"They'll work, bless you," said he, when asked what they would do when he got them here. "They'll have to dig clams, saw wood and the like. They want to come. Those things work themselves. You can't stop them. It is one of the fore-runners of trouble ahead that will be much more than we have passed through."

Dreadful predictions are made by Mr. Foulke, of panic and disaster, of the sudden death of men in high place, of uprisings of wage earners, and of violence that shall extort all the money from the rich and give it to the poor. Then there will be peace. Foulke is in dead earnest in his purpose.

TWO OPINIONS.

Justice O'Brien and Comstock on Obscene Literature.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Justice O'Brien decided that the receiver of the Washington company may sell "Tom Jones," and several other books regarded by Mr. Comstock as obscene.

Justice O'Brien says:

"It is very difficult to see upon what theory these world renowned classics can be regarded as specimens of that pornographic literature which it is the office of the society for the suppression of vice to suppress, or how they can communicate any stronger condemnation than that high standard literature which consists of the works of Shakespeare, of Chaucer, Lawrence Sterne and other great English writers, without making reference to many parts of the Old Testament Scriptures."

When told that Justice O'Brien had ordered the receiver to sell the books, Mr. Comstock said:

"The judge ought to know the law, but if he has ordered the sale of such books as have been seen by me, he ought to be impeached. I have seen books as I have seen are offered for sale, I will seize them and arrest the man or woman who offers them for sale. They can arrest and I will abide by the result and the matter can be tested in the courts. I have arrested dozens before for selling just such books and they have been convicted and sent to state prison for two years. It is clearly a violation of the state law to sell such works in any manner and I cannot understand how a judge of our courts would sanction the sale of them. I made a brief note on the subject to Mr. Little, telling him the law in the matter and the precedents sanctioned. Any person selling the books in question does so at his risk. The books I have seen contain the vilest and most vulgar language and the vilest cut, and they won't be sold if I know it. It is against the law of public morals and no district can override statutes and that principle."

The books in question are Payne's edition of the Arabian Nights and Fielding's novel Tom Jones, the works of Rabelais, Ovid's Art of Love, The Decameron of Boccaccio, The Heptameron of Queen Margaret of Navarre, the Confessions of J. J. Rousseau, Tales from the Arabic, and Aretino.
