FELL THIRTY-FIVE FEET

Young Windsor Smith is Hurled from a Windmill.

BOTH OF HIS WRISTS ARE BROKEN.

Bruised About the Head and Face—Yet no Serious Internal Injuries Were Inflicted.

Windsor P. Smith, son of Hon. John Henry Smith, arrived from the west Monday evening in a rather severe bruised condition, the result of a severe accident which befell him at Fillmore county, on Saturday. He is engaged with E. C. M. I. and was at Flint on business on the day named. At a late hour he related the story about this, and it appeared that he was somewhat confused by the shock he received. He said: "I was at work on a windmill on the farm of Mr. Hardy, a Mormon, living about five miles from Flint. The windmill was about 35 feet high, and I was at the top of it. I had just finished the job and was about to come down when I lost my balance and fell. I remember striking the ground, but I don't know how I came there. I was conscious all the time I was falling, and I remember striking the ground. I was lying on my back when I came to, and I felt very sick. I thought I was dying. I was in a great deal of pain, and I felt very sick. I thought I was dying. I was in a great deal of pain, and I felt very sick. I thought I was dying. I was in a great deal of pain
