christening party on Clementine street yesterday afternoon, are both still living, though in a hopeless condition. Private dispatches from Salt Lake creek this morning say all is quiet there, with no demonstrations on the part of the troops, and are anxious to have them removed until the danger of further complications is over. The miners are busy pumping out. A report in San Francisco says the troops had been fired on in not only the city but in the mountains.

The German Benevolent Society has taken charge of seven destitute Magdalen Bay colonists, and other national organizations will assist the others. The San Francisco Benevolent Society is helping the most needy.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Communist organization still kept up. Communist workmen will not accept another leading Communist arrested.

PARIS, 26.—Tudors is slightly indisposed. Persigny declines to stand for the Assembly from the department of the Loire.

The government has received favorable accounts as to the prospects of its supporters in the elections.

The Communists are still kept up. The Paris says: Fearing detection, the Communist workmen appear decided to refrain from voting.

The Official Journal contains several decrees in relation to the loan and the war indemnity.

The Paris Figaro says the Orleans princes will proceed to Trobatort, where they will await the decision of the country in silence.

The Constitution argues the electors to ratify the policy of Thiers, without conditions or amendment.

Virtual, a late member of the Communist Central committee, is arrested.

SPAIN.

MADRID, 26.—The majority of the Cortes will hold a meeting on Monday for the purpose of considering the King's refusal to accept the resignation of the Cabinet.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A thousand workmen turned out of employment. A June snow-storm.

LONDON, 26.—A thousand workmen have been turned out of employment by the burning of the Manchester cotton mill.

There was quite a snow-storm in Shields this morning.

Social instincts of Animals.

Some recent contributions to animal psychology, which are both new and interesting, have been made by Mr. Francis Galton, on the half-wild cattle of western South Africa, which he thus describes: "The oxen of which I speak had belonged to the Damara, and none of the ancestry of these cattle had ever been broken to the harness. They were therefore naturally fearless, and during the day, as they roamed about over the country, and at night they were driven with cries to inclosures, into which they were taken by a body of terrified wild animals driven by hunters into a trap. Their scared terror was such as to make it impossible to lay hold on them by ordinary means, with the driving of the herd into a clump and lassoing the leg of the animal it was desired to seize."

Yet these wild creatures are available for service, and Mr. Galton had nearly a hundred of them broken for the wagon, for packs, and for the saddle. He had an extensive experience with the beasts, and beguiled the monotony of days by observing their habits, especially the working of the gregarious and self-reliant instincts. He represents the animals as being stolid and socially unsamiable, even apathetic toward each other. "Yes, although the ox has so little affection for individual interest in his fellows, he cannot endure even a moment's severance from his herd. If he is separated by accident from the herd, he exhibits every sign of mental agony. He strives with all his might to get back again, and when he succeeds he plunges into its middle, as if to bathe his whole body with the comfort of his companions' companionship." This terror at being separated, evincing a total want of self-reliance, as "the traveler finds great difficulty in procuring oxen to draw his baggage, and a broken fore-ox is an animal of exceptional disposition; he is really a born leader of oxen. Men break in wild cattle for harness watch assiduously for those who show a self-reliant nature by grazing apart or ahead of the rest."

THE PRINTING PRESS AT WORK.—Miss Caroline F. F. in Utah, tells some curious facts concerning the literary productiveness of recent times, especially in Germany, a few of which we copy:

It is only four hundred years since printing was invented; yet the first three centuries together produced less printed matter than one year now. The printing press has gone to the ends of the earth so that there are now twenty-nine journals published regularly in South Africa, nearly fifty in Australia, twelve in Van Diemen's Land, and six in the Sandwich Islands.

In the production of new books Germany takes the lead of all nations with regard to quantity, and doubtless to quality as well. In the number of new books France is second, England third, and the United States fourth; while, strange to say, in the number of newspapers circulated, they rank in directly the reverse order, the United States being first, France second, England third, and Germany fourth.

The most popular work ever published in the history of the world is the Bible, of which there have been sold in the world more than two billion copies, while here many a successful novel has been sold by hundreds of thousands.
