Very Profitable Chicken Raising in a Mining District.

CURIOUS GRAVING OPERATION.

Exciting Incident on a Camping Trip.—Arrested for Opening Her Husband's Letters.

Post-Office Inspector Geo. H. Waterbury has arrested J. B. Black, postmaster at Archuleta, N. M., for selling registered letter packages. Black claims to be ignorant.

About one year ago Charles H. Orbt sold his ranch on the Little Laramie, Wyo., to Peter Gick of Omaha, the consideration being about $[illegible]. Now the ranch has been transferred back to Mr. Horst, the consideration appearing at $[illegible]. The property contains $[illegible] acres.

Young Charley Bagley has met with a disfigurating accident, says the Montpelier (Idaho) Post. He shot off an old rusty shotgun were the weapon exploded, a portion of the iron work entering his wrist and cutting out at the elbow of the right hand. The wound was dressed and the boy is doing well.

T. K. Shaw, of the St. Louis bakery, Park City, says the Record, has met with an accident that caused him much pain and will make him a cripple for some days. He took a rubber bottle of hot water to bed and for some cause the cork parted suddenly and allowed the water to escape. As a result Mr. Shaw was badly scalded about the feet and legs.

William Fairbanks, a photographer of Point Arena, Cal., is missing. He was married last week and intended to return to his home on Wednesday with his bride, who went to San Francisco from Indiana to wed him. Last Tuesday he published letters and gave them to his wife, saying he would return to her after doing a little errand. He has not been seen since.

Frank S. Dole, of Tucson, Arizona, has made application for a divorce in the Microfilm Fair an Arizona Indian village. He was late visiting one in such a village the every day life of the Indians of Arizona and Mexico and to have their name a from beads, knives, pottery and baskets on the premises. They would live in houses made by themselves out of the immense cactus which grows so common in the territory.

Mrs. Cole, who was severely burned by the explosion of a gas stove last July, and who in consequence has suffered the loss of the entire skin of the left arm, from the shoulder to the wrist, and most of that of the right, underwent an operation of autografting on Friday at St. Joseph's hospital, San Diego, Cal. Some forty persons relatively constituted the native amount of skin. Only one arm was covered today. The other was covered on Saturday. Physicians have every hope of her ultimate recovery, as this will stop the chief wear and tear from the continued pain which she has suffered.

Thad Wight returned this week from Soda Springs, where he has been several weeks looking after his sheep, states the Bitterroot Bugler. He says fully 800,000 sheep have been grazing in that vicinity this fall. They are now moving south and west. Lots taken at the grass in excellent condition. The sheep are doing splendidly. The winter ranges in Western and Central Box Elder and southern Idaho, where most of the sheep are now heading for, are also in unusually good condition for sustaining the vast numbers of sheep that are now being driven upon them.

The Denver chamber of commerce recently received a communication from the Cincinnati board of trade urging that the Colorado delegation in Congress be requested to vote for an amendment to the interstate commerce law by which the interior cities would be given a better chance for their share of the enormous rates. The proposition has been reported on by Commissioner Jones, who is of the opinion that such an amendment is unfavorable for the reason that it would render through rates higher than they are now, and reduce local rates below a living figure for the railroads. He believes such action would be especially detrimental to interests west of the Missouri river.

A Yakima (Wash.) man has an invention designed to elevate water by irrigating purposes. He claims, says the Tacoma Ledger, that it is the most successful device yet invented for raising water by the power of the stream from which it is taken. A large paddle wheel, with long, thin steel paddles or wings, is placed near the bottom of a stream, at the small end of a long sheet-iron frame or cylinder. The cylinder is large at the upstream end, and the water, being forced through it, accumulates a strong head at the small end. To the wheel is attached a sprocket wheel and endless chain by which a bucket elevator or pump on the shore is operated. It is claimed that water can be raised to a height of twenty-five feet and in sufficient quantity to irrigate a 160 acre farm.

When a boy of seventeen years of age, in the year 1830, N. Newell, who now resides beyond Nicholls' ranch and is now over sixty years of age, was in hunting and ran to his knee. What he supposed was a horn, says the Grass Valley Times. He broke off as deep in the horn that the wound closed up and all search failed to locate it. Mr. Newell finally concluded that he was mistaken, and everybody but his wife troubles were caused by rheumatism. Of late the old gentleman knew got to be so sad that he had to leave several times and was treated for the malady. A few days ago the horn worked its way out and was found to be half an inch in length. Mr. Newell says after enjoying good health for forty-three years he feels easier with the horn in a little vial tucked up in his knee.

There is now on exhibition in this city, says the Oroville (Cal.) Mercury, the ground of a chicken wheel, which recently was found to contain a specimen of gold worth $[illegible]. The gravel was brought down from Hunters on Sunset by several miners, who were at Tuttletown the day previous, and was presented to them by C. H. Horton, which brought it out and showed it to them, and therefrom developed a new industry. For many years past the chicken miners at Hunters have been in demand. Not only were their chicken dinners, but breakfasts and suppers. In fact, a traveler could not go near without being asked to have a chicken issue. The gold in the gravel explains the matter. Mr. Horton has a gold mine which for some reason or other he cannot work. He so relies numbers of twin to grass, as it were, over the mine. In their own way they pick up the small pieces of gold for the other at the metal for a foundation for the chicken. Dividends are added and the flesh of the bird goes into the pot which the contents of the gravel are passed out.

Several residents of Nice (Cal.) were a few weeks ago debilitated upon a camping trip, and among the parties for the expedition, they set out. According to the report of one of the party they pitched their camp in a jungle that is literally alive with mountain lions and panthers. They had retired to rest and were drawing off right hands, but upon, but trifle six, when one of the party was awakened by a noise. Rising on one elbow he peered into the darkness and could make out the form of a growling, blood-thirsty panther. It was cause to cool die, and he resolved to go right away. He didn't like to do it alone, so he aroused a companion and told him all about the proximity of the animal. Both resolved for their heavy rifles and blew away. But the panther only snorted and continued to scream, at least that is what they thought. Their two companions awoke and asked, "Bang! bang! Still the intruder was there. Four rifles were soon repeatedly spoke and again and again. Said one, "He must be dead." "No doubt about it," replied another. The dawn of day was anxiously awaited, and with the first signs of morning the rifles pointed at the beast play. It was a shed-tailed, tin-backed rufus, minding clothes and underwear. Both the rifles and the cuticles were riddled beyond recognition.—Sugar Pine Pine.

Some pencil cuts have been developed at the trial of Clark Armstrong at Los Angeles, Cal., who was arrested for opening her husband's letters. From these letters, which were read in court, it would seem that the husband has been plotting with a magnetic healer, Allie Leach, by name, to secure his wife's murder. Mrs. Armstrong, the state prosecutrix, after which he would get a nice wife and wed the dusky Miss Leach. Armstrong thought that if his wife was in jail she would not appear in a divorce suit which he intended to begin as soon as he got rid of the wife. Mrs. Armstrong stated that about a year ago she met Armstrong, who made love to her and finally married her. Soon after the marriage he began to abuse her, and had one party line be invited to the marriage for their benefit. He threw her out of doors, and was in fact cruel to her in every way. He was in the habit of attempting to defraud his mother-in-law. Several letters written to Armstrong by the fascinating Miss Leach of Santa Barbara were introduced in evidence. Miss Leach is no doubt a young woman of attractive as well as beauty, says an exchange. These are the letters that Mrs. Armstrong intercepted and of which she was prosecuted by her husband. In one of the letters she informs the plot of action on the part of Armstrong to get his wife out of the way and elope with her. During the reading of the letters Mrs. Armstrong was cool enough. The case has been taken under advisement.
