THE BOX ELDER DISASTER.

The sense of disaster which prevailed itself to the people of Brigham City on the bright Sabbath morning of this week telegraphed, with the feeling of regret and loss of so much property destroyed and trusted fields laid bare, a sense of gratitude that the sudden occurrence which usually accompanies such events did not attend this. Notwithstanding the tremendous force of the flood as it swept huge rocks, vast quantities of soil and a great mass of timber right into the settlement and tore from their foundations at least two farm houses, yet no one was hurt, no lives were lost, though there were several narrow escapes. This freedom from loss of life truly is a source of thankfulness.

As to the heavy loss of property caused by the breaking of the Three Mile canyon reservoir, it may be said that a considerable share of the burden falls on those who can ill afford to bear it. If the sum of $25,000 is a fair estimate, a goodly portion of this will be in damage to the county by ruined highways and to the railway company by the washing out of its track; but the farmers whose fields came under the spread of the avalanche of water and debris also have been subjected to comparatively great loss.

Here is a time when the magnanimity of the people who are not sufferers can be manifested. As soon as the real extent of the loss is ascertained, the amount of relief that is necessary should be made known, that the community may respond promptly to any requirement of assistance. Where people are rendered homeless and their property and prospects for a time destroyed, they ought to have that aid which will enable them to bridge over the loss and start anew. No sufferer by the Three Mile reservoir disaster should be allowed to remain destitute.

Right here it may be well to sound again a note of warning in the building of reservoirs. Even in this case it may not be too late; for we presume the dam will be reconstructed. In doing so the lesson taught by this catastrophe should not be unheeded, and other works also ought to profit by it. These reservoir dams can be made absolutely safe from everything except earthquakes which rend the earth asunder, and each one of them should be made so. Reservoirs in this State should have such strength in their banks that not even a "cloudburst" should be able to test them out. The safety of life and property alike demand it. There may have been no culpability in the occurrence, but the bursting of the dam is sufficient proof that it was not equal to the requirements of prudence and safety.

MUST NOT FAIL.

In Saturday evening's issue of the News a communication from the president of the Western Electric association referred to an impression which is gaining ground that Salt Lake City would not be represented at the Electrical to be held in Denver this year, and the gentleman expressed his regret in a most pointed manner.

The subject is one that demands the immediate attention of local musicians. When Salt Lake had the Eisteddfod last year, the success of the event was contributed to very largely by the Denver chorus. If it were only reasonable at the part the Coloradoans performed there, ordinary courtesy would require that Salt Lake return the compliment; and for their own credit in the arena of musical competitions, as well for the encouragement of the divine art in the West, this city should and fail to be represented at Denver by a first class chorus.

It may be that leaders of regular organizations are too heavily burdened with duties to engage in the training of a special corps for the Denver competition; and perhaps there are other sufficient reasons to justify those leaders in not taking a specially prominent part; but this would not relieve them from the moral obligation, in the interest of the community, of giving effective assistance to others who might undertake the task. There are in this city plenty of talented choir leaders but so pressed for time but that they could take up the work, and carry it to a successful conclusion. A chorus could be organized with members selected in whole or in part from regular organizations, with the consent and support of the leaders. A Gleeclub organization could be drawn just in form in a very short time, and make a choir thoroughly representative of the talent of the city. The item of whether such a venture would win or lose in the competition is of small moment; it would guarantee an excellence in rendition of the pieces which would compare with the best Utah's choristers have acquired, and that is the order element which Salt Lake would contribute to the concert at the Denver Eisteddfod.

We trust that an enthusiastic, capable and patriotic choir leader, whether now engaged or not in controlling a regular organization, will step forward at once and meet the requirement of the hour, not allowing any small difficulties or jealousies to stand in the way. The Salt Lake choristers cannot, in honor be impassive, nor fail to have a representative choir at Denver.

NEWSPAPERS AND CONTEMPT.

On Friday last the editor of the Sacramento, Cal., Bee was fined $500 for contempt of court, with a provision of imprisonment one day for each $2 of fine. The occasion of the trouble was the report of a divorce trial, published in the Bee. The attorney for one of the parties in the case called Judge Catlin's attention to it, saying that the article was so unwarranted that he brought it to the notice of the court, that the latter "should say from the bench that it believes it to be false and unwarranted." The court did so; then the Bee asserted that its statements were true, and that the attorney and judge knew it "at the very moment when they unconscionably, shamelessly and tyrannically declared it to be a gross fabrication." Then the contempt proceedings were instituted.

The action of the court in this case is just the opposite of that taken by the New York court of appeals, referred to in the News a short time since; and as we viewed the New York case to be a constitutional proceeding, we must regard the Sacramento case as the opposite. Under the New York rule, the remedy for the attorney claimed to be wronged was in criminal or civil proceedings for libel, or both. He also had the privilege of asking the court to say what it did, but when that court proceeded to take up the cudgels it laid itself liable to the newspaper criticism. There was no contempt of court in the business, as a court; but there must be of the judge who would take the matter in the form in which it was, and proceed as was done in this case.

In our view the proper procedure was as the New York court lays it down. The judge who criticises a newspaper and in return is criticised in about the same style has not recourse in proceedings before himself as judge. If he is wronged he has his remedy in proceedings for libel, civil and criminal. The offence not being committed in his presence and not being disobedience of a regular and lawful order of court, the judge was goes outside of this line and by contempt proceedings seeks to establish his own veracity is, in the minds of many people, pretty near to what Judge Catlin said it would be if he did not take such a course—"too contemptible to be the subject of contempt." The Sacramento method of administering contempt law gives opportunity for too much that is arbitrary and oppressive.

TORNADO FIGURES.

The authority on weather conditions in this country furnishes the New York World a vivid description of the formation of the tornado. According to this it generally appears on a hot afternoon. Suddenly there rises in the southwest a greenish black cloud. A gentle south wind is blowing towards the general storm, which almost invariably will be found to the northwest. The black cloud draws near, preceded by a mass of dust. A terrible roar is heard, usually at least fifteen minutes before the arrival of the tornado, giving ample warning of its approach. What the cause of this roar is, is not known, but it is supposed to be some manifestation of electricity. The wind now blows violently from a western point, and the tornado, when accompanied by a violent hailstorm, arrives. On the south side the destruction may extend to a 1,000 feet or more while on the north one may escape injury within 400 or 500 feet from the scene of desolation.

The immediate cause of destructive whirlwinds is supposed to be the meeting of cold air currents from the north with warmer air from the south. In order to obtain the destructive force displayed by that which visited St. Louis recently, they require long, open stretch of country. It is not denied that tornadoes may be born and have a short-lived existence on a small area, but in valleys surrounded by mountains and hills their force is necessarily broken.

The question whether destruction by tornadoes has been more frequent in later years than formerly may be answered to some extent by official figures published. In 1878 a town in Alabama was destroyed and 10 people killed. In 1879 Chicago was visited and a number of people lost their lives. In 1877 two tornadoes saw on record, one in Illinois and one in Wisconsin. The victims are given as 13. In 1878 47 persons lost their lives in two tornadoes, was 13 in Missouri and 34 in Connecticut. In 1879 there were also two tornadoes, one in Illinois and one in South Carolina. The victims in both numbered 17. The record for 1880 is 2 killed in Arkansas, and 85 in Missouri, 2 in Wisconsin, 8 in Illinois and 15 in Texas, in all 91. In 1881, Missouri, Illinois and Minnesota were visited, and the victims numbered 25. In the two remainders of 1882, Missouri and Iowa were visited and 68 people lost their lives. In 1883 the list of dead in Missouri, Wisconsin and Minnesota was 81. The record of 1884 is 11 people killed in Alabama, and of 1885, 6 victims in New Jersey. In 1886 Minnesota lost 64 people, and in 1887 Kansas lost 27 and Arkansas 20 in tornadoes. In 1888, 15 persons were killed in Illinois and in 1889, 40 in Pennsylvania. The record of 1890 is 86 killed in Missouri, Kentucky and North Dakota. The year 1892 experienced three tornadoes, carrying away 152 persons in Kansas and Minnesota. The year 1893 was still more disastrous, 201 persons being killed in five tornadoes striking Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas and Iowa. In 1894, 78 people were killed in Iowa and Minnesota and in 1895, 28 were the victims of a destructive wind in Iowa.

The figures are, of course, but complete, but as far as they go they indicate that both in frequency and destructiveness the tornadoes of later years surpass anything on record. Thus, the victims of the decade 1876—85 amount to 503, while those of the following decade are 659, and the victims of the three years, 1894—96 will now much more than equal those of the preceding ten years, the victims for this year alone amounting to at least 800. These facts do not bear out the statement that tornadoes have been just as frequent and destructive formerly as of late years, nor can they be explained on the ground that the means of communication now are so much more perfect that the news of calamities are easier obtained. A decade or two has not brought about so radical changes in the methods of spreading the news from one city to another. It would rather seem that or some cause or other nature is in commotion, and the effects are felt in the world.

SCOTT ANDERSON'S POSITION.

Scott Anderson, the well known temperance lecturer, handed the following in to the News today:

To the Editor:

On Saturday evening last, in the Thirteenth ward meeting house, I spoke for some twenty minutes in favor of prohibition for our new State. I sent no notice and made no special preparation for my address. In course of my remarks I took occasion to refer to and to criticise an editorial which appeared in the News of that date. On Sunday morning the Tribune, giving a report of that meeting, broke it with these words: "Scott Anderson Angered by Newspaper Criticism," and in the body of the report I am made to say that I stigmatized the author as "a scurrilous rascal no matter who he is."

Yesterday I wrote to the Tribune explaining that I did not object to and was not angered by newspaper criticism, and that the article in the News was not scurrilous, whatever else it was, and that I would not have called the author a scurrilous rascal. I further explained that my principal and strongest objection to the article was that it purported by the use of the editorial "we" to speak for the whole Church and not for the writer only.

For some cause or other my letter did not appear in the Tribune. I therefore ask you to kindly insert this brief note, permitting me to say in conclusion that I am strongly opposed to the idea that the Church to which I belong shall be precluded from speaking out as a church in favor of any and every needed reform. I shall take an early opportunity of fully explaining my views in this direction.

Yours respectfully,
SCOTT ANDERSON.

June 6th, 1896.

With the issue between Mr. Anderson and the Tribune we have no interest further than that, since he appears to have been denied the privilege of stating his own position concerning what he said about the News, we deem it just to give publicity to his statement, that he may not be unfairly represented before the people.

Upon the two points of objection which the gentleman takes to the News article: On the first, perhaps it might not be amiss to call his attention to a fact that is thought to be generally understood, though he seems not to comprehend it as some others do. The editorial "we" represents the editorial view of the paper; sometimes that view may be the same as that taken by the Church on a question, or it may be on a matter on which the Church has not expressed an opinion; "we" means the editor in that capacity, and nobody else—this Cleopatra of editorial number one. As to the other point, our article contained no suggestion that the Church to which the gentleman belongs, or any other, should be precluded from speaking out as a church in favor of reform. Our instance is that the Church is perfectly free of restraint in that business, and that its work is to make every honorable effort to reform men from evil or misfortune. What we did say was that no church as such ought to seek to dictate to or dominate the state in legislative or other proceedings that are solely the business methods of the state. The gentleman misunderstands our intention if he thinks we would put strings on any church or church member in exercising the greatest possible liberty that comes with a state guarantee of perfect religious toleration. Possibly with this explanation and such further consideration as he has given the matter, he may see that there is not so much difference in our views after all.
