IN THE ARMY.

How the Soldiers Should Prepare for the Next Season.

The first work is to get the wagons and harness which have been in use since last season in condition for the next season, things of the property belonging to the six squadrons and to bits of cords that are fastened to the harness of the wagon frames. All these bits of cord must be cured, and it has been days like the sun was extra hot should be taken out back and all wagons of each pair put into drying the whole morning. As soon as it is felt safe to do so open and allow the harness to get out the sun and leave it ready to fill again.

All wagons which are partly filled with hay should have the hay extracted from them in order for think you will need it to feed in the spring, as the hay will not improve in the water with that which the horses eat in the fields out the wagons for next season. To extract the hay a sailor class is the calling of a mate, get the hay thrown, and have the men so arrange that the mowers will stand at an angle of 100 degrees for three or four days before you extract. These partly used wagons if extracted without warping would be ruined, and the squadrons, instead of a large yield of hay the coming season would be such a negative size for them people are better to him than money in the bank when used as "bait serious."

After the hay is extracted these wagons are to be put in the centre wide frame for each hive, so as to secure an early commencement of work by bees in the sections and as the full sections shall not all come off at once, which will cause the bees to be loath to enter a second set. Fill the rest of the wide frames with empty sections, each having a starter or at least a single comb or comb foundation attached to the top. Then on the starter get a flat piece of tin and bent it. Hold the starter close to the top of the section now turned bottom side up, draw the tin under the starter and immediately place it the sections on the right position, and it becomes a frame. After having your wide frames all fitted as above pick them up so as Cat they will be ready for use at a moment's notice next season.

The next work is to get out material for new sections hives, if you have machinery, or to purchase the material in the flat if you do not get it out ourselves. It does not matter so much how it is obtained so long as it is put ready for use. If you get out your hives the honey harvest the ensuing season will be much better with the sections in place, so that when the bees get in to work they will not be compelled to enter the sections in the middle of a honey flow. Transferring the sections with it. We allow Mr. Cooper sections for next season, and he is coming to Salt Lake City, where he will be the authority for the foregoing, in The Deseret News Journal. As soon as these sections are all fitted with each one with a wide starter and pack them neatly away.

Next, we are to make or get other hives to stack together with those which frames, if we think it worth while to do so. Fill all of the wide frames from the pile of sections as before directed, put a strip of foundation in each brood frame and pack all nicely away. This strip of foundation is placed in the frames as a comb guide, where they are not filled full of foundation. If foundation was a strip three-quarters of an inch wide, and, in fact, it is the frame, get out a board which is the size of the inside of your frame and only half as thick, which is to be fastened to another board a little longer, leaving a handle to it, so that it can be easily held in the left hand.

Now lay the frame on the thin board, and then place the strip of foundation on it and next to the top bar of the frame. Now tip the board to which an angle that the top bar of the frame and the strip of foundation will make a V shaped trough, which is to be so to hold that when melted wax is poured in at the upper end it will immediately run down to the lower end, which (the melted wax) in passing along allows to hold the frame and foundation, thus fastening the strip of foundation so firmly. Then turn the shipping cases for the honey to be prepared, shipping cases for queens, if we may choose to sale, etc., all of which should be prepared during the winter days, so that when spring opens we shall have nothing to do but to give our whole attention to the bees.

Stall Feeding Cattle.

The Kansas experiment station, after a trial, concluded it will pay to stall feed. The Omaha Bee says it pays to fatten cattle in stalls as the most of them do. The old country farmers fatten all their cattle in stalls.

This is somewhat hot but it is more work, but will not the increased amount of manure pay for the extra labor? One thing is sure—it is more satisfactory to stall feed, especially in cold, stormy, muddy weather, and there is much of that kind in the western country.—A. A. Berry in Breeder's Gazette.

The Aeolian organ now constructed at Bath, Me., is called the Kimball. Some irreverent Americus will immediately nickname it the Hymeal, and then it will go down to history.
