CACHE COUNTY FAIR.

An Excellent Opportunity to Visit Logan City.

The three consecutive days beginning on Sept. 27 will constitute a gala time for the people of Cache Valley and particularly those of Logan. The Cache County fair will then be in full blast. We have no doubt the occasion will be one of unusual interest. Our friends in the north never do anything by halves. When they enter upon an undertaking they go at it with plenty of energy. The exhibit will include agricultural, mining, dairy and manufactured products, while the arts, the arts, and education will be amply represented. The women's department will be specially complete.

There will be as many people will take advantage of this excellent opportunity to visit the beautiful Temple City of Northern Utah.

Any desired information with regard to the fair or excursion can be obtained from L. R. Martineau, president, or J. H. Wilson, secretary; address, Logan City, Utah.

Emancipation Day.

This is Emancipation Day, and the colored citizens of Salt Lake are celebrating it in a commendable manner. This afternoon a procession headed by Mr. Roberson and a brass band paraded the principal streets. About 250 persons participated in the parade. Banners representing Lincoln, Sumner and Douglass were conspicuous features of the celebration.

It was on September 22, 1862, that Abraham Lincoln issued his preliminary proclamation giving notice to the States in rebellion that on January 1, 1863, all persons held as slaves within any State or Territory in rebellion against the United States should be thenceforward and forever free.

The evening will be spent in leaning and speechmaking, and in other pleasurable ways, worthy of commemorating a day so important to the history of the colored people of the United States.

WOMAN AND HOME.

HOW MANY GOOD WOMEN FALL BEHIND THEIR CHILDREN.

"Bouquet of New Orleans"—Two Kinds of Women—She Owes a Share Like—Inexpensive Dinnerables—Boiling Milk—Advice to Mothers.

"Why should a woman at the age of forty be, in any sense of the word, passe?" asked Mrs. Terhune at the Montana Lake assembly, and after she answered the question in a paper that was full of the simplest yet the subtlest and most potent sentiments that one is likely to hear for many a day.

Mrs. Terhune pointed out that after the age of forty the mental forces of women are at their best, and yet the sinner of her life is confessed. Take the average man. A woman of twenty marries him; she is some, intelligent and educated. She has read, she has talked a little in the sea of thought and learned with wonderment upon its billows. She has seen glimpses of voyages out there where stately ships of splendid models are gleaming all the while and blue ocean waves pushing the keel of progress. And then she turns to her duties as wife.

At first she follows her reading and tries to keep up with the times, but it keeps her busier now than it did. Then the children come, and she is to hard. Her work is so unending and so exacting. She finds one hour taken from her reading, and her to the thousand of a hundred new uses. She thinks sometimes of the chil-ture she is being, but she has no time. Time use denies that will see to record path. She is a good mother, and her children shall not be neglected.

She lays her book with the remark when some neighbor comes in and tells that she never knew well. She heeds every energy that the children may have advantages. She would feel that she had done a selfish, selfish thing if she sat down to read or to study when there were scores thousand of her by her bedside or her children.

Presently she sees that the boys and girls have discovered that mother does not know. How quickly children come to that! They compete her with some one and she suffers. The boy comes home from school in she loses interest in the things that interested them. She never would have thought she could do that. To avoid it is the very thing for which she sacrificed herself. She has made duty her slave so long that duty is her master. She cannot escape from the slave she has made herself. Her boys for worry and all the day is drawing and even to sleep she dreams of toiling. All her energies drift further and further from her. Her mind narrows till she sinks to the entre—stone. There is not a thrill from her brain that is received by a thought from the world, and she knows it. Then the children begin to think of her as a relic of the dark ages. Would it have been a disaster for her to neglect the children a little in consciousness intimacy to keep pace with their better to acute maturity? Have not the children been the loser? Does her guidance of them when they can return her—sympathy her? And when they have gone out left her alone, and the sense can which she neglected to live, when her shut Neglected, forgotten, surrounded, unshaken, in many things ignorant, in many things dull, the memory of suffer the third sense, the sense of suffering, the income of possibility that was lost the day she was—Chicago Herald.
