AN ANTIQUATED PROCEDURE.

So Messrs. McKinley and Hobart are to be notified by committees of their nomination as Republican candidates for President and Vice President respectively. Utah has one representative, Lindsay R. Rogers, of Ogden, appointed on the committee to inform Governor McKinley of the honor thrust upon him, the intelligence to be conveyed today; while the breaking of the news to Mr. Hobart is to be accomplished a week later, and Utah has a representative on that committee also—Joseph A. Smith of Logan.

No doubt the committees to whom the delicate task has been entrusted will be politic in the manner of the performance, but the suddenness and freshness of the things overwhelm the gentlemen who will head the party tickets; for with all the diplomacy the committees can display, it still is interesting to contemplate the surprise if not amazement with which the gentlemen will receive the news of the convention's action. It might have been unnecessary for committees to undertake such work if Major McKinley had had a special manager for his campaign and had promoted upon a deliberate and well formed plan to capture the nomination; or if Mr. Hobart's wealth and popularity in the East had been proclaimed at the convention with his knowledge as making him a suitable person for the second place. But since the convention proceeding was a work of spontaneity and its action so unexpected, the committee way of informing the candidates of their selection is a timely scheme.

Seriously speaking, however, this method of notifying candidates of their selection, weeks after they have full information, is extremely ridiculous; and the fact that it gives a chance for a mutual admiration program does not compensate for its absurdity. In these days of quick communication, it is altogether too antiquated to be attended with dignity. The politicians ought to come a little nearer up to date. Since a formal notice of the convention's action is quite proper, the modern method of conveying news—the telegraph or telephone—ought to be substituted for the committee. If, immediately upon the result of balloting for presidential or vice presidential candidates, the president and secretary of the convention were to write in an official dispatch to the chosen men, so that this official notice would reach him as quickly as would the tidings through the newspapers, there would be something to admire and commend in the procedure. The importance of a nomination for such high position ought to justify an opportune announcement thereof to the person receiving it.

THEY WANT BREAD.

In the Sermon on the Mound occurs this passage:

> What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread will he give him a stone?

One would conclude that the patriot who would respond to his child's urgently giving that which would not appease hunger was a very amateur father, and needed such complaining as would bring him to a realization of duty. Unfortunately for our country, the feeling of unrest that is permeating the ranks of the common people today is largely due to the fact that their appeal for bread is being responded to by the offer of a stone. This is especially true in political matters. The masses are calling for a change that will give them the necessaries of life and that will more fairly equalize the conditions of existence. The political parties promise, but the promise is broken or empty—an unbelievable or impossible one—and the people go on suffering, the rich getting richer, the poor poorer, and the ranks of the latter being constantly augmented from the dwindling classes.

There is a German legend which runs like this: A beneficent creature who had been moved to pity Siegfried came to the throne and asked what he desired. Siegfried, by a wise counselor, was advised to ask for "what is the sense of that most?" the answer was: "If the people are demanding bread—they have to feed it out." was the reply. "No, fool! Why don't they eat cake?" said one, displaying the ignorance of true conditions.

In this country we have the farmers, the mechanics, the manufacturers, the capitalists. They bear the burdens (or think and they shift themselves up in their banks, their stores, their mills and their offices, and ask why is not the abundance in their hands, if it is they alone who do all the work? Yet in our country the masses cannot do what is suggested. They have no bread, and they ask for cake, because there is more of that except with the rich and powerful.

What will be done? And what people circumstances in consequence by energy may be expected to do to meet such circumstances. The feeling of unrest in this country is a premonition of what will be done. Political parties will be broken when their promises are more frequently than are illustrations of the power they have shown to be to be. Social and commercial conditions will be changed—the people will not be satisfied much longer in being given a stone when they need bread. The unrest spoken of means a revolution in methods in this nation. It may come peaceably, yet if the rich and the powerful who have it in their choice to make the peaceful change refuse to do so, then in their generation it will be brought in violent form. The time is near at hand for this country to make its choice. The masses of the people want the bread they need to live and enjoy life. Nothing less will satisfy them.

ORIGIN OF THE INDIANS.

The Boston Herald of June 28, in a special editorial note makes the announcement that at last the archæological mystery involving the presence of the Indians on this continent has been solved. Science has now a reply to the question: How did the aborigines come here, ages before Columbus discovered the new world? It is Mr. Frank H. Cushing who, according to the Boston paper, has penetrated the great secret that like a sphinx, cold, immovable and silent, has stared science in the face these centuries.

The Herald says an account of the discovery will be published in due time. At present the details are not fully known. It appears, however, that Mr. Cushing has found the remains of an Indian colony, heretofore unknown, on the inner shore of Florida, on the slopes of its coral islands and the slime of their shell beds. These Indians, we are told, living by the sea, and showing a Maya development of their life, appear to be the connecting link between the temple builders of Yucatan and the mound builders of the Mississippi valley. Mr. Cushing has made this discovery, and the University Museum of Philadelphia has had the rare good fortune of making the announcement to the world. Mr. Cushing, it is further stated, has devoted many years to the study of American antiquity, but this discovery in Florida outstrips all his other researches in its interest and meaning, and there is every reason to believe that he has discovered the secret of their origin.

No one can take greater interest in genuine scientific discoveries of this kind than the Mormons. During the past half a century, they have endeavored to enlighten the world on the subject of the origin of the American Indians. Their views have been set forth in connection with a system of theology to which special revelation is claimed, just as the history of the descendants of Abraham, and the sojourns of the world with which they come in contact, always was an inseparable link of Christianity. In the corroboration of historical facts revelation is intensely interested, since the proofs of its authenticity are largely involved.

The Latter-day Saints are perfectly willing to have the statements of the Book of Mormon tested by impartial scientific research. As far as the latter has proceeded the record claims has been sustained. It is an estate for the various scientific records of which have been found, and it is to be very sanguine indeed on the part of those who shall be in a position to speak of the ancient history of this continent with the same degree of certainty as it does of ancient Egypt, Syria, Babylonia and Assyria, its testimony to the Book of Mormon will be as strong and unshaken as it is in regard to the Bible.—N. W. Ill.

DESERVED WHAT HE GOT.

The individual who was killed, as said in war, is a person on relatively high, and evidently appealed to the police to get his money back, is of a class who will get no sympathy from decent people. It is not an unusual event for certain crooks, when they get hits a trap of their own making, and get the worst of the encounter, to appeal to the police for assistance. They are at their money cannot them to "square" and then they want the police to bear the expense of enjoying possession of their cash—all at some they are cheerfully ready and to lam, however. It is not a very exalted or noble sight if the police would refuse to have anything to do with such cases. When such collusionly associates their cause with the interests, and appeal to the police of the public, the officers of the law are not in the wrong if the public thinks and so far as to be in sympathy with them. When such people get into trouble and in consequence unfortunately lose their life in the police, if any who kept in custody or whatever said the police finally expend of those would be over indicates of their having the protection in the force through the absence of complaining witnesses when the trial of the accused comes up. In this case the only regret is that it is not the rule to deal with such cases.

EXPLOITS COMMERCIAL OVERLAY.

Figures are generally dry reading indeed, but a comparison between the total value of exports from Great Britain in the years 1895 and five years later has peculiar interest at this time, when opinions are much divided as to whether timetables of other countries must secure England the leading place in any financial reforms that may be considered desirable. Such comparison would seem to prove that Great Britain is gradually being her exalted of the world's trade.

In the annual May the Association of Trade Protection Societies held a meeting in London. In the report of the president the general condition was pointed out, and the subjoined statistics, showing the total value in pounds sterling of the export trade the two years mentioned were given:

To	1895.	1894.
India	£[illegible]	£[illegible]
Australia	[illegible]	[illegible]
British North America	[illegible]	[illegible]
South Africa	[illegible]	[illegible]
United States	[illegible]	[illegible]
France	[illegible]	[illegible]
Germany	[illegible]	[illegible]
Argentina	[illegible]	[illegible]
Holland	[illegible]	[illegible]
Belgium	[illegible]	[illegible]
Russia	[illegible]	[illegible]
Chile	[illegible]	[illegible]
Brazil	[illegible]	[illegible]

That is to say the export to all the British colonies and possessions amounted to £10,000,000 more in 1895 than in 1894. The export to foreign countries fell off £[illegible]000,000 in the same period. The export to India alone fell off £[illegible] and that to Australia £7,000,000, but because the consumption of these countries has been correspondingly diminished, but because they have found other sources of supply. In the iron trade, for instance, Germany and Belgium had encroached on England's market to an alarming degree.

From facts like these the conclusion is drawn that a new era in the history of the commerce of the world is dawning, and one in which Great Britain is likely to play a less prominent part than during the past century.

The St. Louis convention "call" is raising a new question in local politics. It is that the "politics" and those who endorse their action have no more right to engage in Republican party primaries conventions than have the Democrats or Populists, for the reason that the "delegates" will direct from the national party convention. It is argued that their proper procedure is to gathering independent of the regular Republican organizations. An instance upon this rule may present many interesting situations in the coming campaign.

The Salt Lake Herald, in calling attention to the Epworth League convention in the California capital, where it was urged that the Methodist church present an unbroken phalanx in voting on temperance issues at the polls, raises this point:

> Doubtless some of the very people who belong in this league of activists are those who are endeavoring against a possible organized one of the liquor in the part of people who are affiliated with some other church. The "development of church from under" is a good doctrine, provided you specify which church.
