THE SPRAYING LAW.

In response to several requests, we give a summary of the State law creating a board of horticulture—the spraying law, as it is commonly called. The act creates a board of horticulture, consisting of a president appointed by the Governor and paid by the State and of a county inspector from each county, appointed and paid by the counties. The salary of inspectors is fixed at $3 per day for the time actually engaged, and that of deputy inspectors is placed at $2.50 per day. Persons who are not practical horticulturists are not eligible to hold the office of county tree inspector. An annual convention of the board of horticulture may be called by the president, who is required to direct, instruct and compel the inspectors to carry out the provisions of the law. The county inspectors must annually inspect each orchard, vineyard and nursery in their respective counties if the county commissioners so order, and must report to the commissioners and the president of the board of horticulture.

The law requires that prior to the 15th of April of each year every orchard and vineyard shall be thoroughly cleaned of dead leaves and limbs, which shall be burned; and every owner, occupant or person in charge of an orchard, vineyard or nursery is required to disinfect all fruit trees, bushes or vines that are infested with fruit destroying insects, etc. This disinfection is to be done by spraying; but no spraying is to be done while the trees are in bloom. The county inspector is to give notice when the spraying is to be performed; and every person failing to comply or who interferes with the inspector is made guilty of a misdemeanor. Those who engage in the spraying business for hire must secure a certificate of authorization from the county commissioners.

We have been asked as to how often the spraying of trees is required each season. Whoever will carefully read the law will find that the county inspector can serve notice for only one, unless by investigation later on he finds the trees or bushes to be infested; then he can give another notice, and so on. The expression that he is to state the "time or times when it is proper to disinfect the trees" cannot be construed to mean that he can require in one notice more spraying than one, since that would make the law unconstitutional on the very point that the former law was held to be invalid. The statute and not the inspector orders the spraying, and then only of infested trees. The inspector may designate a dozen times when it is "proper" to spray, and if the disinfecting is done on any one of them, the law is fulfilled. It is quite clear that the requirement of some county inspector of a series of sprayings throughout the season is an assumption of legislative authority beyond their legitimate powers, and hence notices to that effect are of no worth. With a general notice for spraying, and designating a time or times when it is proper to observe that, his jurisdiction to direct the performance ceases until he discovers that an orchard is infested; then it may be that he is authorized to issue another notice to spray.

A SUGGESTION TO THE SAINTS.

The last number of the Millennial Star to hand—that for May 25—calls attention to the fact that it is forty-six years last month since the first issue of that publication in Manchester, England, and since that date the journal has appeared regularly, presenting with fidelity the Gospel of Christ. In an editorial in the number referred to there is a brief review of Church history for the past forty-six years, in which are gathered not many of the remarkable evidences of the divine inspiration which has directed the Church authorities, and which has vindicated every official counsel that has come to the Church from its presiding quorums. There are other eras of the Hierarchy where the Church leaders have advised the people in a manner that caused adverse to all human judgment to be to their best interests were concerned, and it is also in doubt how that in every case that advice has proved to be absolutely the safest rule for the Saints to follow. The Star goes on to say:

Other instances are numerous where the Saints have been guarded against [illegible] by the counsel of their leaders, [illegible] to the extent to which [illegible] of the Church. After [illegible] has been organized the priesthood of each ward is encouraged to [illegible] it. The Church is not a secret society [illegible] and whose rules have been carefully defined by those who are the authority to govern them. This fact ought to be considered as a guide of conduct. It seems to us that the church leaders have been guided by inspiration, else judicious counsel would have [illegible] at times. It is the part of the Saints always to have faith and be keeping the counsel of their leaders; they should not [illegible] that they may advise or do [illegible] to be the issues will show to be most welfare and advancement. The history of the past should teach the saints to place confidence in the Lord and His servants. It should cause them to refrain from putting judgment on the counsel they receive, or questioning the wisdom of inspiration built on their foundation.

In connection with this subject Saints of experience will remember how that on various occasions there have been members of the Church who have not comprehended the inspiration of the advice given or the soundness of the policy outlined; and the least wise of these have come out in opposition thereto, having such an overweening self confidence in their own judgment that they ignored the example of others who had done as they were doing and had missed the mark. The fate of these has been as uniform as the success related to—the body of the Church has gone on steadily, while they were left behind. In many instances the failure which came on them was largely because they listened to the advice of individuals who led their vanity by calling them courageous in their opposition, when in fact their antagonism was unfounded—for and foolish, as subsequent results showed.

The repetition of these things goes on from time to time, following in the same general trend of events and ending in the same fashion. The past should warn the Saints how to act in this regard. When they discover men "walking over the traces," it is well to remember that there is a cause therefor, although they may not have full knowledge of what it is. When they see Church councils and quorums take action, they should not forget the care, the patience, and the forbearance that always is exercised before final conclusions in such cases, and realize that for such action there always is good foundation. Then, where they note that members out of harmony with the Church are being flattered and petted on the back, and encouraged in their intermeddling procedure, it is well to recall the scriptural injunction that "the kiss of an enemy" turns to destruction where heeding the reproof of a friend would have brought release from danger.

This is a good time for the Saints to contemplate these matters and to refrain from hasty action in thought, word or deed. The Lord's blessing has been with the Church; those who have strayed from the latter have not been recipients of the former, while those who encourage them in their straying soon have no further use for them except as tools for their own purposes. The wicked try who would entice a lad from school or from home without proper consent being gained, always praise of the "manliness" and the "independence" of so running off, and taunts with "cowardice" and with being "tied to his mother's apron string," the youth who will not yield to his unholy desires. The same procedure gains among men, especially where it is sought to lead them from proper religious influences. Then the "manhood" is set with those who yield but with those who resist the temptor, who have the "courage" and "independence" to conform to proper and timely regulations, contemning the taunts who would lead them off by fair words and promises, to get behind them.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

David Ross, writing from Mammoth, Utah, under date of June 10, says:

To the Editor:

I shall esteem it a favor if you will kindly give me the following information through the columns of the DESERET NEWS. I have been requested by several workmen at this place to ask it of you:

Is a man liable to a fine or imprisonment for working over the eight hours under the law of Utah provisions? I refer to mill men and men who work in the mines.

It is possible that the law was intended to punish the employer as well as the employee, where a workman puts in more than eight hours' time in one day, but there is nothing in the law that that shows a design on the part of its framers to punish anybody. The conclusion that it was intended to include employer and employee can be drawn only from the use of the words "person" in the third section, but it is not conceivable that a court would so hold that the law had any effect, it would say that "person" spoken of contained in the same class as the counties, cities, corporations, manager," etc., and applied only to employers. In that case, then, employees would not be liable. The act enforces the period of employment to eight hours, and "employment" seems to imply the act of employing of or being employed, some to the other side, rather than to invite a possible violation of the law. The enactment being unintelligible in the point inquired after, I direct and request Mr. Ross's question cannot be given. It is not likely, however, that any man would be prosecuted for working over the eight hours if he chose to do so, although an employer might be [illegible] any such opinion is not in the [illegible] more than eight hours' service.

The fact of the matter is that the eight-hour law as it stands on the statute books is absolutely worthless. This conclusion is not based upon any question as to the constitutionality of the act, but because it is meaningless. If it had been framed as a "club" to drive employers, with the full intention of making it of no effect, the end could not have been reached more thoroughly than by the present wording. The law declares the "period of employment" to be eight hours, but contains no expression forbidding a longer period. It provides a penalty for violating the act, but makes no suggestion as to what is a violation. If a court were to decide that in doing the period of eight hours the Legislature meant to say that a longer time is a violation, then in doing so the court would have to hold that a shorter period than eight hours also is a violation. Under the rule of strict construction of criminal statutes, no court could give force to this law. It is a meaningless jumble, not worth the paper it is printed on in the statute book, so far as any protection it affords to workingmen.

THE DECLINE OF FRANCE.

The fact that the French are threatened with extinction because of the indifference of the people to the necessity of leaving a posterity has often been referred to and commented on. Recently a French writer has taken up the subject and endeavored to expose the chief cause of the danger and aim to evolve a plan by which he thinks it can be averted.

He points out that within forty years Germany will have 60,000,000 inhabitants; Great Britain, exclusive of India, 100,000,000; Russia, 200,000,000, and the United States, 150,000,000. France will then have 35,000,000 inhabitants and consequently occupy a place among the nations similar to that now held by Denmark or Portugal. The population actually decreases, the shrinkage becoming more noticeable every year.

It is not supposed that this is due to physical weakness but to social conditions. French men and women deliberately avoid having large families, some because they are unwilling and others because unable to meet the expenses involved. It is therefore thought that the remedy is to be found along the path of reform in taxation. The French annual contends that indirect taxation operates as a fine on the parent with a large family, inasmuch as he who maintains ten children shall pay to the state ten times as much as he who has only one child. The remedy for this is direct taxation which can be so regulated as to equalize the burden.

The proposed remedy, therefore, is this: Impose a direct tax according to the size of the family the taxpayer has to maintain. Let all bachelors more than thirty years of age, and all married men of the same age who have no children, or only one child, pay a direct tax three times as large as that which they are now paying. Fathers of families of two children shall pay only double the tax they are now paying. Fathers who have had or have more than three children shall be exempt from direct taxation.

It is claimed the revenue thus obtained would more than equal the present income of the state by direct taxation, and that the adoption of the system would speedily remedy the decrease of population. Perhaps it would, but probably there are other causes, of a moral nature more potent and beyond the reach of the proposed reforms.

NORDICA'S EXPEDITION will Gothenburg on the 7th to June for the North Pole. There were thousands gathered from all parts of Scandinavia to witness the departure, and as immense fleet of tourist ships followed the steamer Virgo out to sea. The expedition goes to Hammerfest and from there to Spitzbergen, where the second ship will take place at the end of next month. Mr. Andree carries with him a letter from somebody in the United States, addressed to "Mr. Fr. Nansen, the North Pole, Care of Mr. Andree, Engineer." He says he will deliver the letter if he can.

THE BUILDER of the Nephi Times that reached us late today is the first issue under the new management—Henry Adams and Fred Nelson. The paper's outlook is announced as Republican, with the promise that there will be no abbreviation of science correspondence. The Times is a live country weekly, well worth, given its news in crisp style, and never a good showing all around. It is not a "patent" at all, pages are printed at the home office and contain original matter.

Good Health

And a good appetite go hand in hand. With the lack of appetite, the system cannot long remain healthy. Thus the foundations of good health are broken down and the system is made a prey to attacks of disease. It is therefore essential that the medicinal powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla be universally known. Thousands who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla testify to its great merits as a purifier of the blood, its power to sustain and shatter the appetite and provide a healthy entrance to the digestive organs. Thus it is not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does that tells the story and sometimes the strongest recommendation then can be voiced for any medicine. Why not take Hood's Sarsaparilla now?
