DR. Kenneth Grant is assistant director of the Center for Health Care Research at the University of Illinois at Chicago. During the past year he has been the recipient of a grant from the National Institute on Aging to study the health care needs of elderly persons who are institutionalized. He is currently studying a sample group of about 600 nursing home residents and will soon be placing them in a program of respite care. Dr. Grant's research interests include the role of family members in the care of hospitalized patients and the development of long-term care facilities.

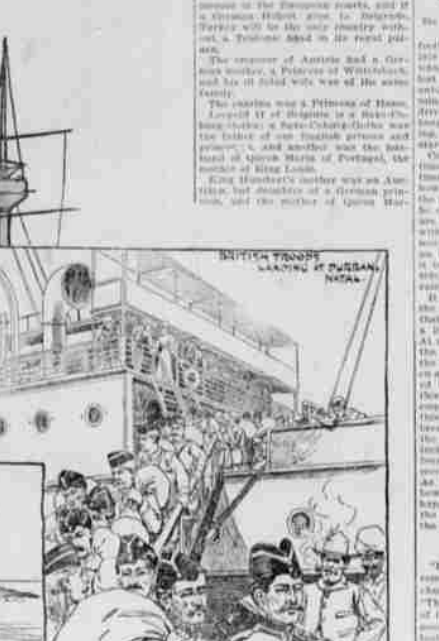

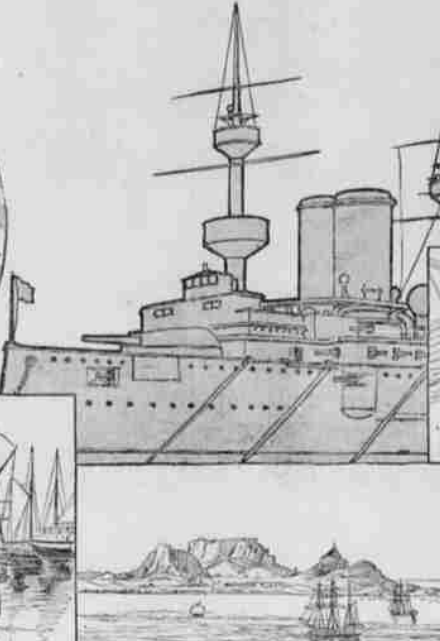

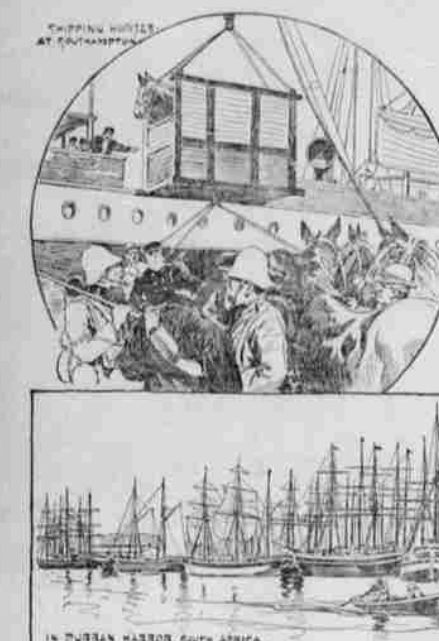

The RADIATIONS at London, it is said, are "very severe" in their combined α , β , γ and X-ray character, and have been found to be "very similar" to those at the other stations. Our London correspondents, FRANK ALFORD, JOHN HARRISON and ROBERT SMITH have, however, at least one view on the matter. "The radiation at London is the strongest north Atlantic station," ALFORD writes. "It is stronger in fact on the EAST of Great Britain, but is weaker on the WEST of Great Britain, and is weaker than the stations on the WEST of Ireland." HARRISON and SMITH, however, are of the opinion that the radiation at London is "very strong" and "very similar" to that at the other stations. CAPS OF GRIM MERE—ONE CENTURY AGO

THE GRIM MERE, a small lake in the north of Scotland, was the scene of a tragedy which occurred on the 10th of June, 1861. The tragedy was the result of a quarrel between two men, one of whom was a man of the name of James, and the other was a man of the name of John. The quarrel was about a woman, and the result was the death of James. The tragedy was a very sad one, and it was a tragedy which was not only a tragedy for the two men, but also a tragedy for the people of the village of Grim Mere. The tragedy was a tragedy which was a tragedy for the people of the village of Grim Mere, and it was a tragedy which was a tragedy for the people of the village of Grim Mere.
