THE VAN WINKLE OF STATES

Great, Prosperous, but Sleepy Ohio, Mother of Presidents.

Yet McKinley Was Elected by Ninety Thousand Plurality—The Silver Question Shelts Enthusiasm.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE NEWS.

ALLIANCE, OHIO, Nov. 25, 1893.—Ohio is a great state. Not that it has very great cities, but it is equally unknowable in any one line, but there is an all round completeness and symmetrical development that gives one a sense of its greatness as he travels over the Buckeye commonwealth. It is great in resources, we find as we tramp up its stubbles, but even from car windows it is the vast agricultural extent and resources that give it the claim of greatness. Hour after hour the train speeds along, and for a whole day a magnificent panorama is spread out to the beholder, hill and dale, upland and valley, green fields and woodlands, modern houses and antiquated residences, cattle and horses, sheep in small flocks almost everywhere.

Within Ohio does not seem to be crowded. In fact there seems a want of competition and a manner driveway the impression that the people are frugalous, or that they would necessarily feel isolated if they have a town, social sociability. Utah with her little towns and villages looks more snug, warm and companionable. Only under the great glow of a November Indian summer sun seemed to be basking in a Rip Van Winkle slumber. Nobody seems to be in a hurry. The cows and horses and pigs looked to be genuinely lazy. The dogs did not have the energy to set up a bark. The children were walking home from school without a tag or a whoop. The very air and the mellow sunlight seemed charged with languor. A vision of peace and rest and quiet hung over the fleeting landscape, and only the many and bright colored leaves of autumn spoke the full gladness of the lovely scene.

Onward sped the ponderous train multiplying a thousand times every hour these lovely visions of an homes agricultural domain.

And when I passed at this quiet hamlet of my boyhood, not little changed for more than a generation, and walked the hills and strolled through the deep leafy recesses of the woods, how full seemed the atmosphere of the precious memories of days long vanished into the past!

But the memories of childhood have their highest value in the awakening of deeper thought, feelings that scarcely define themselves in consciousness, yet they tell us of a childhood farther away and sweeter, or perchance sweeter, more comprehensive and real; a childhood that limits the soul in a sense of infinite and eternal existence, long ere the stars raised their voices in song or worlds were fashioned in space. From the childhood memories at the natural life we too a step into the infinite silence where we can hear those cradle songs of the eternal and imperishable life.

But Ohio has done one thing which in her sleepy way she thinks was done while she was fully awake. She has had an election. McKinley and Nash stumped the state, but only a few people comparatively went out to hear them. There were lots of stay-at-home Democrats, and there were about eighty thousand more go-to-the-polls Republicans; and the result is that McKinley is looked for 70,000. Every Ohio Republican thinks he will get there.

I tried to find out what the people were thinking about when they voted for one man or the other. I was pleased and almost surprised to know that the silver question did not cut any figure at all. Neither side, in a general way, knows anything about the silver question. The left is, the average Ohio voter is not very well posted on any political question. As far as I could gather information I am of opinion that the people of Utah, in one or two more canvasses, will have more political intelligence than the people of Ohio.

The Republican boom in Ohio is just a blind striking-out against hard times. The farmers get but little for their crops. The laboring people are largely out of work. Their belief is that the party in power are responsible, and they cast their ballots against the prevailing policy. The sheep men in Ohio are very numerous, and they are going to be eternal stickers against the free wool policy. The working people believe that a restoration of McKinley's tariff will reopen their workshops. Nobody, whether Democrat or Republican, seems to know much about the money question. The farmers are all unconscious of the fact that low-priced crops and low-priced silver have in their slow pull a sinister union. The Republicans are ignorant enough to suppose that nothing is necessary in order to have prosperity but protection; they shout for McKinley and swear by John Sherman. The Democrats are equal ignorance by believing that the money power exerts its deleterious influence chiefly or exclusively through tariff taxation. It is hard to conjecture how these Ohio people are going to be enlightened and redeemed. If one talks with the farmers, they will all say that they believe in silver; but they have no knowledge of the effects of demonetizing, they have no idea of the economic law which reduces prices in proportion to the shrinkage of the volume of real money. Sherman and company have an easy task to deceive them and keep them deceived. The people are naturally conservative, and new ideas take root slowly. If a hundred able silver men could canvass the state for three months and talk to the people they might be waked up and educated; but nothing less would seem to awaken them. The newspapers generally are of poor quality, even in the larger towns. So far as they are party papers they simply run with the party machine and speak what the party leaders dictate. One would be surprised at the lack of independent and intelligent thought in the average Ohio newspaper.

Of course it should be understood that in making the criticism that I herein record, I speak with the freedom of one born and bred in Ohio still. The wounds of a friend are faithful and it is with deep regret that I see the citizens of the people of a noble state led in the toils of a monetary and financial policy which fosters a slavery and a despotism more withering and benumbing than that which weighed upon the benighted African race in this country for half a century.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

There is one hope that is not likely to fail, that is when people have suffered long and tried many expedients in order to get relief, they are really then out the cause of their troubles and find the remedy with a vengeance, and if the money cannot outweigh in establishing the country a new power longer the remedy will come quite easy, for the people will be in earnest.

THE PRESTON SAINTS.

An Enjoyable Session.—Energetic Work of Improvement.

CORRESPONDENCE OF DESERET NEWS.

PRESTON, Oneida County, Idaho, Dec. 1, 1893.—A most enjoyable time was spent here on Thanksgiving day. According to the program previously arranged the people repaired to the meeting house with their plants, and at 2 o'clock sat down to a bountiful repast. Rich and poor mingled together in an old-time sort of way and all were merry. At half-past 4 the tables were cleared away and a program of speeches, songs and recitations were well rendered by old and young for two hours. Then the room was cleared of benches and a lively dance was indulged in by the married people while the young people assembled in Hatch's hall and enjoyed themselves in a dance. There was plenty of food left which will be delivered to the poor of the ward, so that everything that was done was calculated to make all thankful.

The people here are very energetic. Even with a poor season they have enlarged their meeting house and are doing their share in building the beautiful academy that is being built here. They are also getting out a canal from Mink creek which, when finished, will supply them with an abundance of water, then this place will begin to take on the air of a veritable Garden of Eden, and it will be a matter of only a short time when it will be the capital of Oneida county.

Some fine potatoes have been erected this summer, and the tendency is to come close together instead of being as formerly, scattered out on their claims.

The NEWS is a welcome paper here and is respected for the independent stand taken in all things pertaining to the building up of a great commonwealth.

PARAGRAPHS FROM HOLLAND.

Preaching the Gospel.—Distributing Tracts.—Letters from Friends in Utah Wanted.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE NEWS.

WITTEMANS, 55, AMSTERDAM, Holland, November 21, 1893.—The NEWS comes regularly every week and its interesting pages give us great comfort here in this far-off, foreign land.

The missionaries in the Netherlands mission are all well. They enjoy good health and are meeting with good success. Some souls are added to the Church. Occasionally we find a straw dropped by the reaper. We pick it up very carefully. The actual number that has been baptized in the Netherlands since I came here, eighteen months ago, I do not know, but I have attended to forty-three baptisms myself. These are scattered in different places all over the country and we believe the Gospel of Christ, and I think a good seed will yet come.

We have of late distributed a number of tracts. In Amsterdam alone we have distributed about 500, the last two months. I have also inserted in a paper here with a circulation of 20,000, a tract entitled, The Gospel of Christ. In this way we are sowing the good seed, hoping it will bear good fruit. Last year after a little in place in another paper that has a circulation of 40,000, another tract entitled, "The Tidings of Joy." I like to leave as little unattended which I can handle, to leaving my business with this people before I am released to return home, so that I can conscientiously feel I have done my duty to the best of my ability.

Last Sunday a lady came to our meeting who sought information of my last daughter, Maria Christina Jensen. April next it is four years since she emigrated to Utah. Her mother's name is Wed Cramer, maiden name Boen. It would cause a great deal of joy the mind, if the members of the Church in Zion could remember their relatives, their friends, which they have left behind, whether in the Church or outside, particularly those who write. Families and friends here are really anxious to hear from them, and if they would comply herewith it would be productive of good.
