FOR LOVERS OF ROWING.

A Carefully Planned Boathouse Which a Club Might Build.

Public interest in amateur athletic sports because centered upon college boat racing a little more than fifteen years ago, since which time the growth of the athletic taste in this country, and everything pertaining to athletic sports, has been astonishing to marvelous. Nearly every city, town or village of any note whatever can boast of a well organized athletic club, where ambitious young men may have an opportunity to exercise and develop their muscles in the manner most agreeable to themselves. This form of amusement should be encouraged.

Of all forms of exercise, that of rowing is undoubtedly the most beneficial, if pursued properly and in a systematic manner, solely from the fact that the exercise must necessarily be conducted in the open air.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW OF BOATHOUSE.

A course for boat racing is luxurious if the crews are properly trained for the work, and serve as a stimulus for regular and constant practice. The rowing is conducted either in single sculls, where an individual is pitted against another, or in four oared or eight oared racing boats, built of paper, with air chambers in the hulls to make them buoyant, and constructed upon lines supposed to be the most favorable for speed. The oars, or "sweeps," are of spruce, operated in rowlocks in a projecting iron bracket, set at a proper angle for the sweep to rightly catch the water.

In single scull racing the oarsmen propel and steer their own boats. In four oared boats the bow oarsman steers the boat. In eight oared shells the boat is guided by a coxswain, who not only guides the boat but keeps an eye on each oarsman, to chide or encourage him as may be required. There is no doubt but the best results are obtained from this method of rowing in concert, as it were, under the eye of a coxswain who is capable of correcting individual faults.

The design here given is for a boat house suited to the requirements of a well organized boat club, situated upon the shore of a lake or large stream of water.

FIRST STORY.

The building is sufficiently large to accommodate all the different size boats which may be used by the club. The boat house is a frame structure, supported upon piles, and is connected with the shore by means of a bridge at the rear of the building. Extending across the entire front is a water tight "float"—merely a large plank box made water tight by caulking with oakum. In the water front of the building are two large doors, with a plank bridge from each leading to the float, from which the boats are launched or taken from the water. The racing shells are housed with the bottoms upward, and are supported upon conspicuous firmly fastened to upright posts, and are ranged on each side of the passages, which extend the entire length of the building. There is also a convenient rack for oars.

In the second story is a large reception hall, gentlemen's sitting and toilet room and lavatory, also a ladies' dressing room, accessible from the main hall. The hall is reached by means of a handsome stairway at the rear of the building.

The structure is built of heavy timbers and in the Swiss style of architecture. The first story is sheathed with tongued and grooved lumber and diagonally. The second story and roof are also sheathed with tongued and grooved lumber, but the side walls of the second story are covered with heavy timbering, over which is placed half timbered work. The roof is of tile, put on with standing seams.

The proportions of the cornice are very wide, and form a roof to the balcony in the second story which extends across the front and along both sides of the boat house and affords a splendid view of the racing course. It is designed to accommodate spectators on regatta days.

SECOND STORY.

This balcony, rests upon heavy wooden brackets, and is ornamented by a neat railing of turned balusters and posts. The floor of the boat house in the first story is of heavy plank, laid edge to edge. While the floor of the second story is of yellow pine, polished, in the main assembly room—for dancing if wished—all timber work inside and all sheathing is dressed and left the natural color of the wood, with two coats of white varnish.

The exterior of the building is painted in two coats with a mixture of white lead and linseed oil. The first story is painted a dark olive green, the second story and all trimmings of a warm brown color, with its moldings and clampers and all sash in bright red. The roof is also painted a warm red. Flagstaffs firmly secured in place are provided and set in position at each end of the building. The bridge at the rear is protected by a substantial rail. The building, as will be seen from the perspective sketch, is attractive in appearance and would be an ornament to any water front. The lockers in the second story are all fitted up in white pine, with coat pulley doors, and are provided with wardrobe hooks, shelves and everything complete. This building can be erected for about $4,000.

D. W. KING.

An Emperor's Opinion.

In Germany the telegraphs are the property of the government. The proprietors of a large number of daily newspapers, believing that they were required to pay too high a charge for their telegraphic messages, petitioned the government for a decrease of the press rates. The petition was referred to the Emperor William. He considered it a few moments, and then wrote upon the margin: "The present rate is not too high. The useless dispatches that the newspapers publish every day prove this superabundantly." — San Francisco Argonaut.

OH, MY BACK!

STOP IT NOW, SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very severe attack that almost prostrated me to such a manner that I was unable to stoop or bend down to put on shoes, or to pick up my clothes, when had Providence led Dr. Hunter with the OREGON KIDNEY TEA, to my door. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days I was happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.
