LOGAN.

LOGAN, UTAH, - DEC. 31, 1894.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Crimes, Accidents, Social, Educational Etc., Etc.

Bishop Wright of Hyrum, was thrown from a sleigh on Wednesday evening. One shoulder was badly bruised.

A little son of N. W. Hawe broke one of the bones of the lower part of his right leg by falling from a hand sled.

Will Bowen was kicked on the leg by a horse on Thursday evening, and one of the heel cords cut a rather bad gash.

John Thomas, of Lima, Montana, is at his father's home in Logan, recovering from an accident that badly bruise and dislocated the bones of one of his thumbs.

Home thief has been busy of late, breaking into coal sheds on the Island, and stealing coal. His latest victim was a widow lady, whom he robbed of half a ton. It will be made exceeding sultry for him when caught.

A very pleasant party was given in the Palace hall room by the First ward Sunday school on Friday evening. During the afternoon the little ones enjoyed themselves, and in the evening the adults held the floor.

The record of the tickets sold at the Logan depot to students homeward bound for the holidays, in one day, was 2500. Some have already returned, and the remainder will be here within a few days.

The funeral services over the remains of Sister Martha Fereday, wife of John Fereday, were held at the tabernacle yesterday. The lady died on Friday, aged 68 years. She emigrated from England in 1868 and had lived in Logan for a number of years.

The tramp blacksmith who left town without paying his board bill, and took with him his landlord's coat, was brought from Brigham City by Marshal McCulloch, arraigned before Justice Smith, pleaded guilty to petit larceny and was fined $10, in default of which he is now lodging with the city jailer.

The city council has taken steps toward interesting the citizens in the purchase of the famous collection of Utah minerals known as the Mackintosh collection, which was exhibited at the World's and Midwinter fairs. The idea is to allow the Agricultural College to become custodian, thereby adding to the gifts bestowed on that institution.

MERITS OF ALFALFA.

Withstands Drought, Grazing and Frequent Mowings.

There are many advantages in growing alfalfa clover or lucern for fodder and seed in that vast region west of the ninety-fifth meridian, which has an annual precipitation of only 10 to 40 inches. The soil of these great treeless plains is of such a porous nature that the surface water is readily absorbed, and freezing and thawing will not throw out or heave the long taproots of this plant as the soils farther east will do. Nothing injures it after it is thoroughly rooted excepting gophers, which burrow in the ground and cut off the roots. Drought, grazing and frequent mowing do it no material damage.

It should be sown in the north not later than the 1st of May at the rate of at least a half bushel per acre, in a very finely pulverized seed bed, evenly spread on the ground and thoroughly harrowed in and rolled. The first summer is the most trying time to the young alfalfa plant, but when the taproots have become the size of the little finger they have reached a depth of at least two feet, which in ordinary seasons they will do the first year.

Alfalfa grows upright and seldom lodges like red clover. The stem is smooth and slender and the growth thick and luxuriant. The flowers are purple and very fragrant, the pods spirally twisted, with seed about the size of red clover. No other known plant will bear stack as rapidly as this or produce so much forage in one season per acre. It can be cut two or three times for hay and once for seed. Three to four tons per acre is a common yield, and it never sells for less than $6 per ton. It produces four and often more bushels of seed per acre, selling for about $5 per bushel. Three statements are from Kansas Agriculturist.

In a paper read before the Kansas state board of agriculture J. H. Chisolm lit upon alfalfa the king among clovers and asserts that it pays from $20 to $40 per acre net. Bear in mind, said he, that Alfalfa, Forage, Seed & Co. is the only concern that insures against dry weather and pays a yearly dividend. You will find the most prosperous farmers away out over the plains of western Kansas, along the fertile valley of the Arkansas and other valleys of creeks and rivers and out upon the irrigated high land. There you will find, this year of hard times and financial disaster, this year of unusual drought through the west, the most successful and independent farmers, the cultivator of alfalfa and raiser of cattle and hogs. The future of these conditions is certainly flattering.

Commencing the Chinch Bugs.

Chinch bugs are attracting attention in many sections. The state entomologist of Illinois insists upon the fact emphasized by 11 years' experience with chinch bugs that the best action on so numerous and so destructive a pest is not to be monopolized by any one measure or any one man, but that joint action on an intelligent presentation of preventive and protective measures, properly and widely set up, offers the only valid hope of success. Among the measures recommended are these: Plow a deep furrow around the field to be protected. In their attempt to enter the field many bugs will be accumulated in this. Kill them with a mixture of eight parts to one of kerosene oil. Share well before using.

A variation of this method, used successfully in Wisconsin, is to lay a quantity of green wheat or oats or fresh cornstalks in the furrow, in which the chinch bugs may be killed with this kerosene mixture as they accumulate. Another method is to sow a strip of spring wheat about the field to be protected, where the bugs may accumulate and be destroyed before leaving their eggs for the second generation of the year. The bugs, after having entered the strip, may be confined to it by plowing furrows around it.

Professor Snow of the University of Kansas has discovered a way of killing off these bugs by spreading an infectious disease among them. Bugs affected with the disease are put in the field, and there infect others. In some counties commissioners have employed persons to make a business of applying the infection.
