SOLDIERS' THANKSGIVING GIFTS.

Utah Boys in Manila are Sent Delicacies to Remind Them of Home.

The request of the Red Cross society for contributions of delicacies to be sent the Utah soldier boys at present in Manila as Thanksgiving gifts to remind them of home and that their friends had not forgotten them, was most liberally responded to by the people of this city. Fifty-four pounds of dainty goods, such as canned pickles, olives, confections and the like, were sent, requiring ninety-six boxes, which were packed in big cases. Many of the boxes were hermetically sealed and others so bound around with ropes and wires as to be practically air tight. W. W. Rice and James Green attended to the shipping. There is every assurance, excepting accidents, that the contributions will reach their destination in good condition. Mrs. W. W. Rice and the ladies generally of the Red Cross society are devoting a much praise for their patriotic and humanitarian work.

SERVICES AT THE TABERNACLE

Returned Elders Report Their Labors in the Mission Field.

Remarks by Elders Pitt Willes, Rudger Sedey and President Angus M. Cannon.

Services at the Tabernacle Sunday afternoon, Oct. 23, 1898, were presided over by Elder Angus M. Cannon, president of the Stake.

The choir sang the hymn:

Lord, Thou will hear me when I pray,
I am forever Thine.

Prayer was offered by Elder William Richardson.

The choir sang the anthem:

From afar, Divine Lord.

Elder William H. Pitt, a returned missionary from Great Britain, was introduced to the congregation as the first speaker. He related briefly his experience in traveling in the Norwich conference, England, and expressed his thankfulness for the opportunity afforded him. His advice to the young men of Zion was to prepare themselves for the ministry and take advantage of every privilege granted that were called into the mission field, that would enable them to expound the principles of the Gospel in a manner that would be for our Savior, when He was upon the earth. The Mormon missionaries had been visited, and were called to preach that Gospel, and therefore could get out conditions of success as long as they put their dependence in God, the Father.

Elder Elijah Weller next spoke. He had labored as a missionary in the Southern states, and felt full. He was in the spirit of the time spirit preaching the Gospel and took the happiest period of his life. Continuing in the mission, said the speaker, had materially changed in the past year or so. The work was opened up for the spread of the Gospel, and the demand for more Elders was daily increasing. There were opportunities came before young men that, actual of country, and the honors his Elders laboring throughout the land were giving the praise to God for preparing the way for the spread of His work. Elder Weller bore a strong testimony to the divinity of the work in which he had engaged and exhorted all to acts of righteousness.

Elder Jesse Badger was the next speaker. For the past year he had been out with the people of England, and he, too, had experienced the same joy and satisfaction expressed by the preceding speakers. True, the time spent in the mission field was not all sunshine, but the Lord was blessing His servants, and obstacles which at times seemed almost insurmountable, had been put aside to make room for the spread of the Gospel.

Elder Joshua Boley, a returned missionary from the Eastern states, followed with a few remarks. He said he had labored for the most part in the state of Pennsylvania where the work of the Lord was spreading rapidly. Three branches had been organized and were now in good running order. Traveling without purse and scrip was the order in that conference in the days when meeting with great success and making friends on the right hand and on the left. Pennsylvania was a good field to labor in; the people generally were hospitable and could be depended upon to carry out the spirit of prophecy and respect. The speaker had a testimony of the Gospel, and felt to exhort the young men of Zion to be faithful in their duties with the Lord, for as our Father with the instructions received from time to time.

Elder Angus M. Cannon, president of the Stake, was the closing speaker. He said it gave him great pleasure to listen to the testimonies and experiences of the Elders. It was pleasant for us, he had now visited into the mission field. The old look him to the Eastern States and the Lord's work in the state of Connecticut and Pennsylvania where he had experienced the blessings of God in his Gospel. We were to be a chosen people, said the speaker. They had to be proved and their sincerity to the Gospel tested. The Lord had proved many times shown and brought to realization of the fact that those who would remain faithful, must necessarily use your mind.

Elder Cannon referred to the early-day experiences of the Saints and depended on the faithfulness of the young people. If followed all to live righteous lives, as they would be blessed in the exercises of faith in the kingdom of God. If they did not observe unto the Gospel the form of Godliness, they would be withdrawn from them and they would be found among those who had fallen by the wayside. The principles and ordinances of the Gospel were saving and forewarning. They were declared to save all who would obey, but those who would not fall after those who failed to respond to laws and commandments which He had laid down for their guidance.

Elder Cannon spoke of some length on the manifestations of God unto His people, and the blessings attending all who would obey the laws. He then mediate vicinity grass in form six to twelve inches high. When work cannot be done on the canal, men can be building homes for themselves. His advice now is come with their teams, leaving their families behind for spring, by which time homes may be provided for them. THAT JOYFUL FEELING

With the exhilarating sense of renewed health and strength and increased ability to do work, comes a feeling of gratitude to the person or means by which this has been accomplished. Many have gone beyond the old time medicines and the cheap substitutes offered, and have found in the Gospel Medicine, the Great Life Giver, as applied by the well-informed, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, manufactured by the Californian Fig Syrup Co.

WHAT SCHOOL SHALL I ATTEND?

A person who has decided to qualify himself for business life, has a matter of importance to decide. He should carefully consider which school he will attend that gives the best course of instruction, and the proper thing to be done by such a person, is to investigate for himself.

The system of bookkeeping is one in which very few people are able to be conversed to all practical bookkeepers and accountants who have examined it, to be the most practical and comprehensive system of accounts in use. It is known as the Elite Cabinet System of Bookkeeping and in order that there may be no mistake about the fact that all those contemplating a course in commercial training, let it be understood that the system taught in the schools called the Elite Cabinet System on the market, realized that there was a good demand for a less comprehensive system, adapted to use in public schools, private academies, etc., and to secure such a system, they condensed the two sets of books, viz., the Tablet system (a ledger-less system) and the "Cabinet System." In the latter there is one an inventory transaction or business entry to be made, and the pupils are able to be graduates. In the Elite Cabinet System the schoolroom is resolved into a store, building, and the pupils become actually the proprietors of which the students are buying and selling, making out checks, drafts, certification of deposit, and other instruments, and the pupils are buying and selling goods from the wholesale house, writing business letters, making out invoices, keeping accounts, entering sets of books that may be out of balance, and, in fact, everything that is done in the line of bookkeeper in real business life. Now contrast the Tablet System with the foregoing, as applied to the Elite Cabinet, wherein the student is not only obliged to do his own bookkeeping but that also of his imaginary partner. A little reflection will enable the dullest mind to see the absurdity of such a procedure. Take one illustration will suffice. In the Elite Cabinet of the Tablet System to the Cabinet, although dozens of others might be submitted, it is claimed, however, by those who use the Tablet System, that it is entirely practical and that business is done in the usual way, but we would like to know how any system can be practical that is directly opposed to real business sense? Let us take one example, all the Elite schools of Salt Lake City. Are the bookkeepers in these establishments all making the foregoing statement? Are they making the same statements? Are they making the same, dire, writing the same business letters, making the same checks, drafts, etc., etc.? Are they making the same amount in the book at the same hour and in precisely the same way, or would the head bookkeeper in Walker Bros. store, or large big banks to locate an error, take his book and go to Amelia's or someone entirely with the books there? You will at once say certainly not, what a ridiculous idea to even think of such a thing. And yet in the end of practical business that the Tablet System teaches.

The Salt Lake Business College has the exclusive right to the Elite cabinet system of bookkeeping in the State of Utah, and that is the only place it is used in other schools. The cabinet system is so superiorly restricted that no other school can secure it. Attention is called to the fact that the Tablet system is a "key" to the Elite system, and the cabinet system contains absolute competency on the part of the teacher whose knowledge of bookkeeping is confined to the Tablet system. Some students have practical experience in accounting, or in a school using the cabinet system. The work in all the departments of the Salt Lake Business College combines the "meaning by doing" method of instruction, and that splendid results are obtained, we have abundant proof. It gives more patents to positions every month than there are students, amounts beautiful of "work" done in a whole year. Another evidence of good faith on the part of the Salt Lake Business college is the fact that it patronizes the cause of all its students, who are looking positions—something that other schools religiously abstain from doing.

The method of teaching shorthand and typewriting in the Salt Lake Business college is just as far ahead of the methods in use in other schools as the latest system of bookkeeping is ahead of the old "single entry." This is a bold assertion, but on the contrary, a plain statement of facts, subject to proof. Those who are considering the question of the Salt Lake Business college should carefully consider the foregoing, and the success of instruction. If you are interested in bookkeeping you should see the cabinet system with the tablet and all other text-book discussions. The Salt Lake Business College is now in its 18th year, and has hundreds of graduates in its multitude of practical commercial fault-finding and will be glad to show or to advise be done, and all under the undivided supervision of teachers who are practical and experienced bookkeepers. If you are interested in shorthand and typewriting, visit this department where you will find a room full of bright, intelligent, and industrious students, all practicing under Prof. H. A. Brown, who enjoys the most enviable distinction of being the best shorthand in the West that teaches shorthand and typewriting successfully and practically. Prof. Brown will be glad to help you, extend the school that has qualify you for a position, and that is able to help you when you are ready for one.
