Court Paragraphs.

On Saturday afternoon, in the Third District court, the Pioneer Savings and Loan Association brought suit against H. P. Mason and William Roberts for $1,200. In August, 1891, Levi C. Ogden applied to the company for a loan, agreeing to erect on certain real estate buildings and improvements at a cost of $4,000, and also executed a bond of indemnity, with the defendants as sureties, to pay to the plaintiff $300. The complaint says they failed to comply with their agreement to make the improvements, except to the extent of about $1,800. The company loaned the money, which was secured by mortgage. This was foreclosed, and the amount of the judgment with costs was $2,016.11, and the property only brought $1,700. It is alleged that Ogden is insolvent, and now they want his bondsmen to pay the deficiency between the judgment and the amount realized, and also interest, making the total $1,200.

Josie Frick and Emma Frick, the latter an infant, by Josie Frick, her guardian ad litem, vs. the Rio Grande Western railroad company is the suit of a damage suit also filed on Saturday. John Frick was killed on a freight train run by defendants between Salt Lake and Tintic, and on the 14th of October last was killed by a car being switched. The complaint alleges that he died was caused wholly and solely by the thoughtlessness and negligence of the company in allowing its tracks to become obstructed and by the lack of due care and diligence in unloading the construction. Damages are claimed in the sum of $15,000.

Judge Anderson has granted a temporary injunction in the suit recently brought by a number of taxpayers against the Sanitary Water Company, to restrain the city assessor from assessing the company with a water tax. The complaint alleges that the company is a corporation for profit, and that the city has no authority to levy a water tax upon its property. The city claims that the company is a corporation not for profit, and that the city has a right to levy a water tax upon its property. The injunction will be in force until the case is finally decided.

Prospects Improving.

Brother M. L. Oscell, writing from Colonia Diaz, Chihuahua, Mex., Aug. 8, 1892, says: "We have had some good rains and the Indians are quiting in flock, so we think all will be well yet in the Mexican colonies."

Provo Teachers' Institute.

The last day of the exercises at Provo there was a large attendance. A music lesson was given by Prof. P. M. Bach.

Dr. Karl Absser lectured on "School Discipline."

Colonel Parker lectured during each session, and it has been decided by the managers of the Summer school and institute to publish all his addresses in full, in pamphlet form.

A great feature in the afternoon was the lecture at Prof. G. H. Schodahl on "Principles and School Devices." The lecture on "Teacher and Society" by Colonel Parker was deemed to with great interest, the Academy library being packed to overflowing.

Prof. R. Gail, principal of the B. Y. A., concluded his masterly discussion of psychology began on Wednesday.

Mrs. Parker told a few words of farewell to the class.

Colonel Parker, in half an hour's talk, summed up all his previous remarks. He expressed his appreciation of the attention and eager desire manifested by the class for knowledge. He would take pleasure in being at home and attend his very favorable impression of the teachers of Utah.

Superintendent Wilson announced that this concluded the work of the institute, and it was turned over to the organization of the summer school.

Prof. Gail, after the meeting, up to forward remarks from those present, and quite twenty persons responded, all being earnest in their praise of the good done by the institute.

Mr. Parker was called for and rendered a beautiful selection. Mr. L. G. Dalton in behalf of the class presented Miss Hendling with a pendant in the form of a shield, with the inscription, "Class 1892." The lady made a graceful response.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Prof. Bach.

Bishop Tanner pronounced the benediction.

A Yorkshireman Abroad.

"There was a very good audience on the occasion of your last visit," said John D. Parkinson to a Kansas City man. "The car was crowded, and I shared my seat with a St. Louis drummer. He was sent to hunting a good time at the expense of his fellow passengers. As the conductor came along a dog under our seat began to howl vigorously. The conductor looked hard at the drummer. No dogs allowed in the coaches, said he to the baggage man, he said. 'Put my dog' meaning the drummer. He made a vicious kick. The car went howling under the seats the full length of the car. The passengers laughed. The drummer looked sober and between each course for him. He continued to run and howl. The passengers joined in the search, but no dog could be found, and the speed was finally given up.

"Just as the conductor had settled into a doze he set up a howl swearing we poisoned him. The search was resumed, but without success. As we pulled into Kansas City the drummer was in a fine fix. He was ordered to leave the car, and he did so, and was mighty spunky. The conductor was overjoyed. He got out and looked for the drummer's dog. The drummer had alighted, and as he stepped on the platform of the depot down from the grips and flew into the train engine to escape with his grips. He was a worthless cur. The conductor was so glad that he forgot to take up tickets for forty miles."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Business Is Business.

A result has come to light in natural history the other day. He brought into the office a species of lizard popularly known as the "skink." Holding the little reptile above his head he let it fall to the floor with the result that a portion of its tail broke off. Nothing then it was seen a part of the prehensile organ, the scaly, silver decorated piece of tail, but, backed firmly up to it, and jerking the skink against the spikes, lay a lizard. It was a lizard for a few seconds, and then ran swiftly away with the tail glued together, apparently as sound as ever.

The experiment was repeated several times, with the result that the skink could dispense with responsibility in sticking. Considered little, fingers, etc., together, and we threw out the suggestion to local curiosities for what it is worth.—Outside Observer.

A New Element in a Mineral.

It is reported that a new element has been recognized in a mineral found in Egypt by Johnson Matthey in 1890. This mineral, first called "Jacksonite," but afterward marine, consists mainly of aluminium, manganese, cobalt and iron, in combination with silicic acid. It is of a rose color and yields on treatment with sulphuric hydrogen an amethyst and solution a white precipitate, from which a pure indescible was produced.—New York Journal.
