CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Sixty-ninth Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will convene in the Tabernacle on Thursday morning, October 6th, 1898, at 10 o'clock a. m. Officers and members of the Church are invited to be present.

LORENZO SNOW,
GEO. Q. CANNON,
JOS. F. SMITH,
First Presidency.

COLONIES AND OFFICES.

Another argument advanced against the falsely ascribed "imperialistic" policy of the United States is that the extension of an American protectorate to the Spanish colonies would necessitate a number of new offices in this country. This is regarded as such an account of the expense involved.

It is probably true that the new foreign policy of this country would involve the addition of another secretary to the President's cabinet, corresponding to the minister of colonies of some other countries. The new cabinet officer would also have to establish several bureaus dealing with the finances and other questions arising out of colonial affairs. Possibly it would also be necessary to create a separate military service for duty in the various dependencies, and there would thus be room for many office-seekers. But it cannot be admitted that this country is justified, for any such reason, in shirking the moral responsibilities incurred by the remarkable surrender of Spain. It cannot be urged truthfully that this country is too poor to undertake a magnificent mission of humanity involving millions of human beings.

The fact is that the natural resources of Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippine Islands are such that with American methods it would take but a short time before they would yield enough to render the possible acquisitions self-sustaining and profitable. Spain's trouble with her colonies has not originated in their poverty, but in the methods by which they have been kept in poverty and slavery. The experience of Great Britain and Holland prove what a rational mode of government can do for the benighted races of the earth, and American methods should not prove less successful. Let the Spanish colonies be liberated from mediæval morals and they will, before long, pay all the officers needed for the regulation of their affairs and the insurance of a stable government.

AN UNSELFISH PARTISAN.

Montana is the home of a politician who evidently thinks more of principle than of personal gain. His name is Charles S. Hartman and he is at present a member of the national House of Representatives. He was recently nominated by the Silver Republicans and Populists for renomination, the expectation being no doubt that the Democrats would also fall in line. The latter, however, had nominated Hon. A. J. Campbell for that place and refused to rescind their action. Mr. Hartman addressed a note to his opponent, offering to submit the matter to the national chairmen of the three parties and abide by their decision, his desire being to confront the straight Republicans with an undivided force, but this proposition was also declined. Then, rather than prejudice the cause to which he is committed, rather than have the chances of the Silver party imperiled, he withdrew himself and asks that his friends give their support to Mr. Campbell. Not only this, but he tenders his personal services in aid of the latter's election.

There is a decided appearance of unselfishness in Mr. Hartman's action that is as refreshing as it is commendable. Realizing that for two candidates representing the silver cause to be pitted against a united opposition would most likely mean defeat, and being unable to obtain that co-operation of his services and capabilities to which he doubtless believed himself entitled, he sacrificed his ambition for the present by doing the only thing in his power to unify the forces which he expected to lead. How true it is that the question of whether or not there is honor in politics depends entirely upon the individuals who are engaged in it.

THE QUEEN OF DENMARK.

The present year will be noted in history as one in which an unusual number of noted persons are removed from this sphere of action by death. Another name, that of the queen of Denmark, has been added to the list. She had been ill for some months but her condition has not been made known to the public, so the announcement of her demise is to some extent a surprise.

For the last thirty years Queen Louise has exerted a secret influence upon European politics quite remarkable when all the circumstances are considered, and entirely out of proportion to the rank of her country in the family of nations. By social diplomacy she succeeded in establishing relations with the most powerful courts of Europe. Princess Alexandra became the wife of the Prince of Wales, and Princess Dagmar the empress of Russia, while Prince Wilhelm was made king of Greece. It is no secret that Russia's policy during the reign of Alexander was largely shaped at Copenhagen, where the late Russian emperor and his Danish consort were frequent guests.

It is probably no misfortune of fact to say that the queen has been the actual ruler of Denmark, and that but for her intelligence and strong will King Christian's path as a ruler would have been everything but smooth. At the beginning of their reign they had the misfortune of losing Schleswig and Holstein to Prussia after a brief but heroic war. Since then, the country has enjoyed peace and made wonderful progress towards prosperity. At the time the mighty currents of democracy have swept over the country, and were apparently stemmed only after a long and bitter struggle directed from the throne. The death of the queen is sure to be followed by changes in the political life of the country in the interest of government by the people.

EX-SENATOR BAYARD.

After a life of seventy years, more than half of which was spent as a public man, the career of Thomas Francis Bayard is brought to a close. He was born in Wilmington, Delaware, on the 29th day of October, 1828, and received an ordinary education. He began what has proved to be a busy life in a mercantile establishment in New York city, but being evidently dissatisfied with that occupation he took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in 1851. For a short time thereafter he was district attorney of his native state. He practiced steadily until 1869, when he was elected to the United States senate to succeed his father, being re-elected in 1875 and again in 1881, resigning the seat in 1887 to become President Cleveland's secretary of state. On Mr. Cleveland being re-elected, in 1892, Mr. Bayard was appointed ambassador to Great Britain, and in that distinguished position gave general satisfaction to both governments and all classes of people.

Mr. Bayard came of a race of statesmen. He was a Democrat a Federalist and was to some extent a sympathizer with the cause of the Southern Confederacy. He remained, however, loyal to the Union. He was the fifth of his family to hold the position of United States senator, and while perhaps not as conspicuously able as some of the others, was still every degree above mediocrity and at all times commanded respectful attention. He has held an honorable place among leading London, but his retirement from employment in the hot, enthusiastic road enjoyment in the pursuits of ease and labor afforded by retirement, a retirement which has proved to be final.

OLD AGE.

A court somewhere recently decided that a man was old at the age of 65. This has about as much of instructiveness in it as the expression "as large as a piece of chalk," or "as long as a string." Some men are younger at 65 than others are at half that age, and those at 35 are as old as others are at 70. There are plenty of men who are only 40 who have furrowed brows, gray hair, weak knees and the other evidences of decay much more pronounced than many who have passed the milestone of life indicated by the court's ruling. The fact is that as a general proposition, in this respect, we are largely the architects of our own life structure. With reasonable health and in the absence of casualties of any kind, a man should be vigorous, sprightly and capable at the age spoken of, and there should be no impairment of his faculties for many years following. Of course some were born to longevity and come to brief periods of life; such cases are not being considered.

The late President Woodruff was in his ninety-second year at the time of his death and was not at all in a state of mental or physical decline when the summons came. Of Gladstone the same may be said with the exception of a few years in favor of the latter; also of Bismarck. Men and women who live to be 100 are not at all rare. The New York World has described a man who was born in 1800 and gives every promise of seeing the century out that brought him his birthday which his employer is reported the most remarkable of which our men in Texas can boast. His name is "Uncle" Dick Fitch and he lives at White Mound, the office merchant of Sherman. He has almost lived to see three centuries. Born in California county, Texas, he went to Texas and located on his present home on July 16, 1844. He has seen Texas under three forms of government, a province of Mexico, a republic and a state of the Union. He tells many interesting stories of the early days of Texas. The man without some of the Lone Star state has been opened to civilization, and with cowhawk and tomahawk marked Uncle Dick Fitch helped to blaze the way. He graphically recounts scenes of wasting tomahawk and Indian war-whoop when Indian blood drenched the ground and red men fell before the pale-face. Uncle Dick carries a cane, but can walk well without it. He sees and hears, but now reads with pebbles case without them. He has not a cloth in his head, but sets regularly three meals a day, certainly regularly at dinner. He retires early and arises before daylight, a custom which has been the habit from childhood. He says he wants to live to see the twentieth century. If one could depend upon appearances it would no doubt be safe to say that Uncle Dick Fitch would live to point 19th age.

It is not considered for England to say the climate is the matter of longevity. The London Journal tells of a man which seems affirmative to have passed eternity. It was observed on the church wall of the ancient church of Goring in Oxfordshire. The inscription is as follows:

"Here lyeth buried the body of Hugh Wheeler, the servant of Master John Whitelock of Goring, who departed this life the 15th day January, anno domini 1615, being aged 116 years."

That was a good while ago and the means of testing the authenticity of the inscription have no doubt been entirely effaced. Such a remarkable period of life is much longer a reliable account of. If a court had passed on Wheeler's case at the time of his death and pronounced him an old man, there would not have been such an incentive to discussion as to the matter first spoken of.

THE PIONEER ROAD.

If the county commissioners would look after the old road by which the Pioneers came into this valley and take the measures necessary to preserve it from vandalism, their action in this regard would undoubtedly meet with general approval. The attention of the "News" has been called to the fact that at a certain place this road has been obstructed by persons who claim it is private property, and that the general public is denied the use of it. Recently, as the story goes, a team came on horseback over the road. He was in a hurry, having received a message that his father was dying and he was on his way to the northland. He was met, however, at the place referred to and turned back and had to make a long detour, thereby losing over an hour of time particularly valuable under the circumstances. Other cases have been treated in a similar way, it is said, and there is considerable indignation on account of the matter.

Only the most weighty considerations could justly accrue in changing the course of a public road, when the change is not made for the various benefit of the public; but with regard to the Pioneer road, it should be remembered that it is an old landmark that should be preserved as far as possible. The general public has an interest in this overshadowing that of any private party or parties.

SILVER ISSUE NOT DEAD.

It may be of interest to note that some of the journals of this country that formerly regarded the silver issue as a dead one are commencing to realize their mistake. The Chicago Times-Herald seems to be considerably alarmed at the outlook. It says that the silver battle must be fought over again, and that every man who believes in honest money, who would maintain the nation's honor and who desires to see the principles of monetary reform fixed in the statutes must turn out and become a fighter. Every congressional district is now a field of battle, and no effort must be spared, no stone left unturned, to win the fight.

There is, the paper adds, no other issue before the people today so vital as this.

In view of the failure of the torpedo boat to score in the recent contest between the United States and Spain, it will doubtless be a surprise to many to know that this country is now engaged in the construction of three of these vessels. It is claimed that they didn't work a fair chance during the engagement, and as far as relates to the vessels perhaps this is true. But, then, neither did that great Krupp gun at Morro, Havana, have much of a chance.

Holmes is making new conquests. He has succeeded in raising the Spanish cruiser Maria Teresa from the depths into which she was so unceremoniously hurled by Schley and his authority, and claims he is able to profit by the service for the Original Holmes. This manner of getting good ships is much cheaper than building them.

The American press commissioners should consider carefully the Congressional instruction that the Cuban revolutionists have all pertinent. If that is a fact, the demand for a speedy termination of Spanish rule in the Western hemisphere cannot be disregarded. A government that scarcely people to death has no right to exist.

The "News" is invited to come down from the clouds. When engaging in metaphor the surroundings should be preserved. The means by which news is disseminated comes from the clouds, and the news itself.

A Dewey and Wheeler Presidential ticket would certainly be a strong one. They both know how to make a humane campaign.

Perhaps Col. Roosevelt wishes he had time for and said that tax bill and smiled while he did it.
