RIDDLE THE WEEDS.

At last evening's session of the City Council a resolution was passed ordering the enforcement of the ordinance requiring property owners to cut the weeds growing in vacant lots and on sidewalks adjoining property. The notice is timely and should be given full force before the season is advanced so as to allow weeds to seed and spread. One of the greatest difficulties presented in the wind time is in the spread thereof from places where they are allowed to grow carelessly.

While the Council was on this subject it should have gone one step further, as the officials directly in control of the departments most interested should do so now. The cutting and destroying of weeds as called for by the resolution will accomplish small measure of good unless the city also clears the streets of the objectionable growth. When property owners clean up, the city should do its part with that under its control.

It should be remembered also that one of the chief means of spreading weeds in this city is the irrigating ditches. These are under control of the city, and in many parts of town present a rank growth of weeds, which should be as thoroughly cleaned up as any vacant lot is. Then there is the canal which brings irrigating water from Parley's canyon, Big Cottonwood and other sources. This is also lined with weeds for miles, and in season carries down seeds which are distributed all over town, to the serious injury of the gardener, who must have the water for the parched soil, but also has to take a heavy burden in the weeds it brings.

It is a good thing to go after the weeds and root them out; but let the business be carried on in lots, on sidewalks, in the streets, irrigating ditches, canal and all, that some real benefits may accrue.

WOLSELEY AS A CRANK.

Lord Wolseley has been creating a new agitation by his recent remark that he would not like to get the British Indian troops against any European army, and is being roundly denounced as a crank by time of his own action and others who have been praising the Indian army as a well drilled and competent body of soldiers, and the Gurkas and Sikhs as among the best light infantry in the world. But the fact remains that if General Wolseley is a crank in remarks of that kind, he is turning in the right direction for British interests in a military way. Those who charge him with being guilty of a piece of rank indiscretion, and who point out that the net result of his criticism will be to encourage any Russian plan of conquest that may exists and to discourage the only considerable force that England could bring to checkmate it, do not richly judge either the motive or effect of the greatest's diplomacy.

As a matter of fact those who know Lord Wolseley's methods and the official sentiment he has to deal with will recognize at once that he has made another play for increased efficiency in the British army, and that the very criticism he has uttered secures success in attaining his object. Five or six years ago he characterized the English Boers army as "a big boys" outfit to be pitted against any existing European army on the battlefield. He was roundly abused for that, but the fact was that he was right, speaking from the military point of a commander. He wished to see his army improved, but had tried in vain to effect necessary changes, but could not overcome the influences that stood in the way, not only in United States but in the army itself. Then he made the statement referred to, and the country was aroused. The prediction that the Boer forces would look upon the British army with contempt as a rabble, his successor witnessed the fulfillment, but the indifference he criticized at was removed and today the British army is in better condition than it has been for a century.

Lord Wolseley is pleased with the British Indian army as he did with the volunteers, and the probability is that the Indian troops will be invited to bring themselves up to the standard their general requires, and will join in the governmental act in doing so that they require. Lord Wolseley is a prominent man. Many subtle motives go for his actions a thing or two about British military matters.

FRUITS IN SOUTHERN INDIA.

One of the greatest sufferers in the Oregon disaster, of Oakland, Cal., has turned out to be something else. Last Friday he displayed all the symptoms of that disorder, and the fact that he had been bitten by a dog twelve years ago made them to change of him to have that a genuine case of rabies had developed. The blind, staggering, stupid madman was secured, and other much trouble an effort was administered in the hope of giving relief, but not a slightest exciting effect. Later, a neighbor of Nixon arrived and brought the information that the patient's ailing was common to him after he had been shot on a spree, so had been the case in his instance. The afflicted man had a hard struggle to get through alive, but he did so and he obtained a respite again, and another prospect of an authenticated case of hydrophobia from an old dog bite has gone away.

LOOKING TOWARD RUSSIA.

One of the greatest symptoms of the condition of the Turkish empire is its apparently the result in Macedonia, which seems to be spreading in spite of all efforts to extinguish it. The statesmen of the situation seems to be only anxious by those who have made it their business to keep the ship map by the Dardanelles alive. They remember to feel that unless any their efforts in that direction will be in vain.

It is generally believed, and upon good grounds, that Russia will be the master of such in order when the time could have come for the carving up of Turkey, but at present the attitude of the St. Petersburg government is wrapped with the affairs of Egypt, and it is probable that as long as the Suez canal remains under English control that problem will be considered more important than the condition of a few million Christians under Mohammedan rule. Without her share in the road between the Mediterranean and the Asiatic waters, the key to the Dardanelle would be of small value. It is therefore easily understood why Russia remains passive, satisfied with preventing others from interfering to behalf of the Christians in Asia. Still, her present inactivity is not considered as a sign that her ancient policy is given up. When Russia advances this time, it will be at the opportune moment. She will not again be deprived of the fruits of her victory by a European congress as in her last encounter with Turkey.

It is noticeable that the demand for the civilized world is growing for a final settlement of the oriental question. The fields of Armenia, still reeking with the blood of the victims, have not ceased to appeal to God and man for some measure of just retribution. "The solution of the eastern question," says the Pigaro, "cannot be delayed much longer, whatever efforts may be made by some powers, such as Russia and France, to hold up a dead man by the shoulders and insist that he is still alive." And the demand for a final solution of the Armenian problem must be met. Russia's policy remains as it always has been, one of widening her borders at the cost of the Asiatic hordes that have infested Europe, and she is rapidly growing strong enough to carry out the program in spite of all Europe. Hence undoubtedly has a great mission among the nations of the world and it seems that the project of it is becoming greater than it has been hitherto.

A LESSON IN HUMANITY.

The case of eleven-year-old Jesse Proctor, of Santa Rosa, Sonoma, Cal., is an illustration of the patience and skill which physicians often display for the benefit of their patients to health, and also of the real sympathy for the afflicted that is frequently shown by physicians, friends and acquaintances. On July 20, 1899, the little girl was horribly bitten at a bonfire. Nobody thought she could live, but a mother's careful nursing and the skillful use of a veterinary injection were important factors in saving her from the dreaded rabies. But there was great wounds on her body to be healed, to be cared for, bills to be paid, and her mother, who had been engaged in the work, which now gives great promise of being successfully accomplished in a period of about eight months.

As a sample of what the doctor and others have done, suffice to say, for the little sufferer, it was necessary that the young woman should be in constant attendance on Saturday and to be relieved with her duty by other women on eight different occasions, and another occasion in the day for the Lord's Day. A boy, all the little school house offered to take care of her, and the young man, who was also when the work has been satisfactorily completed, to give the kindly and personal offerings to the boy in no means confined to the [illegible]

BEAUTIFUL SALTAIR!

Don't forget the grand ball tonight.

One night when Mr. Isaac Hess was shipping with me, says M. F. Hatch, a prominent merchant of Chatterminster, Washington, I heard him groaning. On going to his room I found him suffering from cramp colic. He was in agony. Asking I found he would die. I hastily gave him a dose of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He was soon relieved, and the next morning he almost well. What was that stuff you gave me? I inquired him. A few days ago we were talking about his attack and he said he was never without that remedy. I have used it in my family for several years. I know it works well, and do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends and customers. For sale by Druggists.

Mr. C. G. Strong, principal of the public schools of Anderson, Cal., says of here and Chamberlain's Pain Balm and have found it an excellent remedy for bruises and slight wounds."

Lameness usually results from a sprain that has been improperly treated. Chamberlain's Pain Balm is generally thought of for sprains, for which Chamberlain's Pain Balm is specially intended and recommended. It effects almost immediate relief and in a short time effects a permanent cure. For sale by Druggists.

"It is the best relief medicine in the world," is what Mr. E. M. Hutmacher of Marquette, Oregon, says of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. "Not but feels me to make this statement in from the fact that my mother is now here visiting me, and I intend here last summer as it never took other two or three doses of that remedy to effect a complete cure." For sale by Druggists.
