The relief fund has reached $100,000. The students are collecting money for the suffering in the streets of Madrid.

The town of Tempaque has been converted into an island by the flood and communication with it is almost impossible.

The storm wrought immense damage in Marcum, Sangueso and Malaga. The railway works at Bailen are greatly damaged. Three persons were drowned and many cattle have perished. A gen dharme at Cumeneru, who was an eye witness of the disaster, says the storm was accompanied by terrific thunder and lightning. He and a companion, on the order of the mayor, ran to the river to assist the unfortunate whose houses were being flooded. With much difficulty thirty persons were saved. The mayor arrived on the scene and appealed to all passing carts to assist in transporting the unfortunate to the upper part of the town, but the people were so terrorstricken that they could hardly move to the assistance of their drowning comrades. Those in danger seemed incapable of realizing that danger. Houses collapsed one after another, and were swallowed in the seething torrent.

Daylorah saw hundreds of men and beasts struggling in the water, whirling along so rapidly to destruction that they could not be saved, and were soon lost to sight. It was a sight never to be forgotten.

POLITICS IN CANNONVILLE.

A Hot Rejoinder From the Republican Side.

Editor Deseret News:

Permit me space in your valuable paper to correct some misstatements in an article sent from this place by Wm. J. Henderson, Jr., in reference to our late election.

In his communication he says, "We did not have to go into another county to organize a club and carry the election." If the gentleman would only post himself on election matters, he would readily understand that clubs can be organized jointly in two separate precincts for the sake of convenience, but they would be compelled to vote in their respective precincts, and could not possibly have any bearing on carrying an election.

He next finds fault with the judges of election and the deputy registrar on account of their politics, and for the simple reason that these gentlemen were Republicans, he insinuingly speaks of their actions in certain cases as "illegal" tricks. He says "one voter failed to put the "A" to the name of Lewis A. Willis, the candidate for justice of the peace, and the judges would not count the vote. The only semblance of truth in the above statement is that the judges would not count the vote. But in order to conceal his, Wm. J. Henderson's own blunder, he charges the omission of the "A" to the voter. The fact of the matter is, he wrote the name of his man Willis on all the tickets himself, and consequently made the blunder referred to. He also witnessed the count as a representative for his party. And when he seeks to the stern fact that his mistake would cost him a vote, he, in person, endeavored to influence a "Liberal" trick, so he is pleased to term it, by trying to persuade the judges to count the vote for his candidate.

He refers to a challenge at the polls and says the man challenged "voted here for years." Now the gentleman challenged has resided here just two years, and has voted only twice before, and being a man who is not legally qualified to do jury service, he was to the registration officer deemed a fit subject to challenge, on the ground of non-citizenship. The judges in this case allowed the gentleman to deposit his ballot, when they were satisfied that he had a right to do so, and knowing also that they had a perfect right to look and determine all challenges.

We feel to sympathize with the practical of our local Democratic club, in the many blunders he has made in his first communication to a leading public journal, but trust he will profit by their being pointed out to him. In conclusion permit me to say in defense of our Democratic friends, that they are men of mature years, and of good sound intelligence—men who have believed in the principles of Republicanism for the greatest part of their lives. They are men who have identified themselves with their party from conviction and principle, and because some one else did.

"To the Manner Born."

Disputes over the wording and meaning of Shakespeare's text used to be common enough in the "palmy days" of the drama, when intellectual giants (into the elder Booth, Edwin Forrest and Mercury were its exponents, but they are seldom heard of in these days of so-called "matter-of-fact." However, there are now still disputations over such themes, for Mr. Thomas W. Keene, during his recent great engagement at McVicker's new theatre in Chicago, was waited on one evening by two gentlemen, who differed in opinion as to the proper wording in one of Hamlet's speeches. One contended that it was "Though I am native here and to the manner born," while the other held that it was "to the manner born." Quoth the first:

"This is delightful," said the tragedian, when told that his decision would settle the wager they had made over the question. "But why not appeal to the printed text of the best edition of Shakespeare?" he asked.

"I have showed him by the book that I was right," responded the gentleman who claimed "manner" to be correct, "but he says it is a misprint."

"No, it is not a misprint," replied the actor, who, without doubt, one of the profoundest Shakespearean scholars alive, "Hamlet was not born in a manor, but in a kingdom. He was a prince of the blood, and not the petty son of a manor. When he states he 'to the manner born,' he means in the custom and habit of his country."

The exponents was entirely satisfactory, and the actor was awarded the stakes, a basket of champagne. He is ready to decide any other knotty Shakespearean point on similar terms.

As a Man Sows It.

The letter delivered into the auditor yesterday. It was from a man who swore, and he was trying to give her, in his emphatic manner, why his idea of the girls of Massachusetts Per and the continental Miss Dean. Dean is what he says. Connect is unnecessary.

"I want to tell you that the women here are the most glorious creatures on the face of the earth. They are talking about in the independent, healthy manner you never see among the women, or among the mountains. Say, why are they always sick in town and ready for twenty mile tramps when they get out here?

"Of course you want to know what they be wearing. They all have dresses made of flannel or something with white shoes, white caps, lots of ribbons and Fuchsias. Bring, and white parasols with bands of white hair tinted all over the cap. The colors are in bands lengthwise, and there's something round the bottom that I think you women call a panel—or perhaps it's a flounce. Why can't women more like that all the time? Why don't you speak to me about it."—New York World.

Pinned To Seventeen Thousand Dollars.

A few days ago a young farmer named Edwards, while plowing near Sandusky Lake Springs, struck an iron hot wood hip projected a half inch above the surface. It was apparently filled with earth, but its great weight led to an investigation. Under an inch of dirt were many pieces of gold. The nuggets in which they were wrapped was rotten, but sufficient for a generous audit the coins were minted. They were all dollars. Edwards hoisted his trousers to a wagon, drove to the Astoria and deposited it in bank, expressed doubtful of the find until his return. The amount is $17,000.

There has long been a tradition in Sutherland springs neighborhood that Santa Anna buried treasure there on his retreat after his defeat at the battle of San Jacinto in the war of independence, and various searchers have hunted for it. The pot was originally sunk deep, but the rains of more than half a century had denuded it of its covering.—Gal. Chicago Tribune.

A Curious Bible Family.

Living near Waynesville is a family named Yount, who lately moved there from Gallatin county. Recently the head of this family entered a hardware store at the first named place and called for seven hoes. The clerk was astonished whereupon the farmer explained that he had brought but four hoes with him from Gallatin county, and wished some more to keep his peace and hoes off peace.

He is possessed of seven children, the mother and only daughter having six fingers on each hand, two of the boys are born on each foot, and one having seven toes on one foot. The family only drinks tobacco and is regarded with much curiosity by the neighbors on account of their extra supply of fingers and toes.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Doctor Prohibited on Sunday Bath.

There is a surprise, doubtless unfounded, that those whose feet is low at the Duplicate compounding are moving backward in their course with regard to the rules dropping nearly all semi-monthly to young people. The directors explain that they have no objection to croquet, tennis and sitting in hammocks on any except Sunday, and the rules prohibiting these pleasures apply to that day only. To many Methodists it will appear ominous that any rules were necessary forbidding youthful Methodists to play games on the Sabbath.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The Bitter and Washing.

We have come to look upon water as meant primarily to wash in, as we aid to abstain rather than a thing of beauty. A story of a Somersetshire peasant will illustrate what we mean. The individual in question had never seen the sea until he was taken to Westonsuper-Mare on a "short treat" excursion. Naturally the sight, the sands and the roar of the waves, trebles and bass, as soon as the esplanade was reached, gathered around to see how the first sight of the ocean would strike the natural man.

Will it be believed that the words struck from him by the view of "the unfathomed deep" lying in vast expanse before his eyes were these, "If I'd known what her were like I'd have brought down a bit of soap and had a good wash?" The man—or rather the soap—had entered so deeply into his soul that he could only conceive the sea as a huge washing place.—London Spectator.

Forming an Opinion.

It was a very clever young man, who, undecided which of two young women to choose for a wife, gave to each a skein of stranded silk. One of them threw the skein away as worthless, and the other picked out the pearl. The patience, desire to please and prudence of the latter young woman left the young man no hesitation in doubt.

"How long have you been out of work?" asked a lady of a girl who came to apply for a position as chambermaid.

"Ten days," was the reply.

"And in that time you have not found opportunity to mend your frayed and torn clothes? I do not think you would suit me," the lady said.—Youth's Companion.
