Sports and Pastimes

Wheeling and Things in General

Everything has its season—what is the reigning craze today is out of date tomorrow; as with the wheel may type school machine, so are base ball, golf and other hundred spins the prevailing fad for a lot of seasons. Bicycling so though it had its whole reigning world is so hard with the wheel made, which, without doubt, has come to stay, much to the dismay of harness and street car companies. Now can doubt the truth in gleaning at the daily papers or our own screen, that one is slowly-going ways of locomotion are external somewhat hastened by the active and energetic bicycle competition now now requirements each speed rather for business, health or pleasure upon the nineteenth century road horse.

Sister Josephine says the pacific Julia Hill is no mere idle pole sitter, she is simply for epidemic was literally spoken. The pole extends from and a half miles through Prospect park, terminating at Coney Island. The pole is twelve feet wide with a solid crushed limestone surface and extends most of the way through a superb avenue of trees which will make it unusually a popular spin for New York's wage earners and wheelmen in general. A rough estimate gives the number of persons present at the opening on in the neighborhood of 30,000, including the presence of Lyman members of uniformed clubs on bicycles, which was headed by sixteen members of the police force also on wheels.

Even the poor, much-abused cab horse is doomed. London has had pneumatic tires to her tonnel cabs for several years, but now bicycle cabs have been introduced for two passengers, propelled by two pedalists. These vehicles are said to attain a speed of from eight to fifteen miles an hour.

The death to all true sport is professionalism. It creeps into every popular sport and pastime. The Englishman, who is a great sportive people, are beginning to rise up in arms against the force they pay their money to witness in the name of sport. In her last international foot ball game England vs Scotland, doughty sons of Erin and "the lands o' cakes" represented England and upheld her reputation for a "remunneration." Things have got to such a pass there that now the only chance event that Johnny Bull can have any fancy on is the university boat race Oxford vs Cambridge. On July 20th professionalism will make its first onset in American wheeling circles, and where it will end no one knows. In five or six years' time all big meets will be at the mercy of men who (it is done every day in other pastimes) will win or lose a race according to "what there is in it." On every Saturday or soon after the above date cash prizes not under $100, $50, $25, $15, for 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th places respectively will be competed for on the new cement track at Manhattan Beach, or we may expect to hear of a big rush from class B into the ranks of professionalism.

Dan Zeigler, whose visit here last summer gave a great impetus to the cycling game and reward something, made a good impression in New York last week, although he failed to capture a place, but he will undoubtedly be heard from later.

The Zimmerman-Johnson race for the championship of the world, seems to long fire.

Zim (the shester) will be in Denver July 20th and the Rocky Mt Hot Springs Cycle association will make a great effort to get him to stop over there on his way to Australia July 23-24, which will be a great meet in which several Denver cracks will probably participate. If Zim wears the costume he was photographed in in Paris the ladies will be on to get back on the bicycle crime.

Jack Prince, the bicycle vs horse artist, is still in the same business. Judging from reports received from Albuquerque, N. M., last week, however, Jack failed to accomplish what he undertook, and in the slangy dialect of the street gamin "he got it where the bottle got the cork."

There has been a great deal of talk as to who had the first bicycle in Salt Lake, viz. If Mr. John S. Silver, of the firm of Silver Bros., Salt L., he came very near it. Just a few years ago he started to manufacture one and to day shows with pride a nearly made but unused specimen of his handiwork, when only 12 years old in the shape of a tricycle bicycle, to be ridden by Hoover, himself, and one two little daughters now ride up on the wheels.

The diamond stud of Hoch's was lost on Sunday last by the Ogden Giants, but they succeeded in recovering it. Evans was notable for his diamond stud with one of the Giants from the rear of the bleachers on Sunday last. The Salt Lake Giants have a strikingly similar incident, which was ended by sixteen members of the police force also on wheels.

A well known Ogden preacher, it is reported, has entered for the road race.

Mrs. Sisson gives a short account of her century run to Nephi in the last number of the Intermountain Cyclist, where she went in the interest of the above paper.

Cycling has stolen Sampete, and now Manti boasts of a young lady who wheels about town in "rational costume."

John Stevenson is moving an uninstalled spin from the effects of disputing the right of way with a hay wagon.

One often wonders how it is in a city like Salt Lake with all its natural and artificial advantages that we have no swimming club here. A visit to any one of our public bath houses will reveal the fact that there is plenty of raw material, which with some coaching by a competent instructor would turn out very fair amateurs. It is a healthy and manly pastime and a properly conducted aquatic meet is, if anything, one of the most interesting of all sports, barring, of course, those annual fiascoes that are so numerable from every excursion to the Lake (where the most graceful lady swimmer is presented with similar bathing suits, repair kits, a watchmen's flag, etc). It only needs someone to take the lead.

A DELAYED LETTER.

The story tearing down the Cottonville warehouse. One of the workmen found a letter upon which was the inked address "Daniel H. Carter."

"Why, it's old Preacher Carter" said another.

"Do you know?" asked another.

"Why, it's Daniel H. Carter and his name's Daniel Carter. It must have been there years before he went to preaching. It's open."

"Open?" said the second speaker. "Is that letter addressed to you? No, sir. It's addressed to Daniel H. Carter, and he's the only man who has any right to its contents. That envelope's got a United States stamp on it, and I don't care how long it's been there. It's under protection to whoever it carries. That stamp should hold good a day after judgment."

The speaker was evidently a man of weight, for his argument was particularly effective, for there were mutterers of approval to the crowd and echoes that said it several times and logy.

"We don't get no right to open it."

"The spider's right."

"Never read it to his owner."

"It might cost the reader something, anyhow," said a young sprig of the law—"that is, if it's anything particular, whose benefits Mr. Carter was prevented from taking advantage of by this delay."

The upshot of it all was that the letter was sent down to the building which had been fitted up and was doing service as post office in lieu of the old one and sent out by the carrier who had the letter, Daniel H. Carter upon his route.

The letter was opened by him as easy, good natured backsies, and had been parsed at Centerville for almost all the years there he returned from creditable service as chaplain of a regiment during the civil war. It was true that he had passed by all the religiously inclined spinsters and charitable widows in the town, but in spite of this almost unpardonable offense he was well believed and deeply revered, and the church, with the experience of many years, had grown used to its bachelor parson.

The letter was in a small envelope and had been delayed in transit, but, then, some years had passed over the Rev. Daniel Carter's head ago his sight was not so good as it had once been. So, without authority, he had the letter down on his study table and went down to breakfast.

The bread, butter and eggs were particularly good that morning, and the tea was just to his taste, so perhaps the minister lingered a little longer at his morning meal than was usual. It was at any rate a rather long time for a man who had on his study table a letter which had been on the way for nearly six years.

But at last the pastor made an end of eating and again sought his study. He picked up the letter and adjusted his glasses with leisurely ease. He glanced at the postmark and let his eyes pass over the address, but he did not seem to see well, so he took off his glasses, rubbed and polished them and set them on his nose again.

He looked at the handwriting and as his hand trembled he smooth his brow a fresh set of wrinkles came into his eyes. His hand trembled slightly and he laid down the letter a while. Then with a sudden gasp and the exclamation of emotion not even he had expected he tore it open. Once he paused to read a line or two, and the parlor maid in the kitchen Chloe in the hall was wont to say did not average up to her ideas of excellence because he was listening to Salt Lake.

The great big event in local cycling circles in which there is intense interest is the Fourth of July road race on the green by the Y. M. C. A. July 4th over the Farmington course. Tedious, the Ogden grade, is only comparable with Jensen, the Salt Lake hill climber. There are cinch on for either up or down. Some fortunes are to be made, some fortunes are straight as an arrow and as true as the compass and as true as it can be. Everybody is in training for the event. Even the Ogden Giants will follow the race to finish and as the cross on the hill view of the twin meet in the city by a little. So interesting, Manager Kelly and Mr. Cross were to Ogden recently, and report that a whole lot of Ogdenites are coming to Salt Lake to see the Fourth of July road race.

"Elizabeth! Elizabeth!" called the minister—"Has I been paid for my sermon? I thought you had sent my proposal with the money attached it was some time ago."

"Yes, I have paid for my sermon, and I was glad to see him Out West of battle and care for the suffering and dying, to bury the dead, and—to try to forget. But in all these years I have not forgotten."

Then suddenly a thought occurred to him, and he sat bolt upright in his chair. A moment more he had his hat on and was out of the house. But one of his congregation met him as he was wildly flying down to the station, they would only have considered the advisability of attaching such a plaything of unusual creature as the same. But he was off for back on his beat, he had flying and he was flying while and no more letter flying to his lot. The only matter was the delivery. The delivery was no much sooner than they were 20 years ago.

They had gone, and he was hardly out of the sounds of one before he was into the sounds of the other.

In conclusion it is to be hoped they are fine gents. Could any one tell him where to find the gent who ordered the spoiling and telling yesterday. It had been just 20 years ago, you know.

"Now Dorothy—what Miss Lizzie Dorothy—Why, any one can tell you where good Miss Lizzie Dorothy lives. It's right at the end"—

But the interrupted Belmontish stood starting at the man who had dashed off in the direction pointed out before he had had time to finish his sentence.

Who shall tell what sudden instinct drew the minister to the right door. A sweet faced, gray haired woman was sitting near a table sewing. At the unannounced and hesitating entrance of her visitor she half rose and turned very pale.

"Elizabeth, Elizabeth—" cried the preacher. "I have just got your letter."

Miss Dorothy let her sewing fall.

"I thought you did not care for me, and I have lived all these years as near you without daring to say a word."

He hesitated for the letter, and as they held it between them tears dropped upon it.

"Elizabeth, is it too late?" he said.

"I have waited," she said, "because I believed in you. I knew that something had happened that through the mists we could not see. I have kept my love fresh and green, Daniel."

Then afternoon the week back with him to the parsonage.—Chicago News.

POTATO DISEASES.

The Potato Blight or Downy Mildew, the Macrosporium Disease and Potato Scab.

Among the many fungous diseases affecting fresh potatoes three are especially considered in a farmers' bulletin issued from the United States department of agriculture. The potato blight attacks the leaves, stems and tubers. Generally the first noticeable effect upon the leaves is the appearance of brown areas, which soon become soft and foul smelling. Nothing is this disease that a field may appear green one day and within the next day or two become blackened as though swept by fire. The spread of the disease is dependent in large measure upon certain conditions of moisture and heat. A daily mean or normal temperature of from 65 degrees to 74 degrees F., for any considerable time, accompanied by moist weather, furnishes the best conditions for the spread of the disease. The potato blight fungus seldom occurs to any serious extent in sections where the mean or normal daily temperature exceeds for any length of time 77 degrees. The tubers affected with the disease in question show depressed, dark colored spots on the surface, while within are seen blotches and streaks of a brownish or blackish color.

The macrosporium disease attacks the leaves and sometimes the stems, but never the tubers. It appears at any time after the plants are from four to six inches high. At first the older leaves show gray spots, the affected parts becoming hard and brittle. At the end of two weeks half the leaf may be dead and withered, while the rest is of a pale yellow color. Finally all the leaves succumb and the tubers stop growth and are practically worthless.

"Potato scab is too familiar to require description here.

For blight and the macrosporium disease nothing so effective as the bordeaux mixture has been found. For the treatment of potato scab a solution of corrosive sublimate has given best results, and for the macrosporium disease apply the bordeaux mixture, beginning when the plants are about six inches high, and continuing at intervals of 12 or 14 days, until five or six applications in all have been made. If the season is rainy, make the treatments every ten days, the object being to keep the plants as all times covered with the fungicide. By adding four ounces of paris green to each barrel of the bordeaux mixture the treatment will not only prevent the diseases under consideration, but keep in check the Colorado potato beetle and other insects as well. Before adding the paris green to the bordeaux mixture the former should be made into a thin paste by mixing with a small quantity of water.

The success of this work depends in large measure upon the thoroughness with which the fungicides are applied. To reach all parts of the plants above ground with a fine spray requires a good force pump and a suitable nozzle. The knapsack sprayer now on sale in nearly every section of this country will be found one of the most useful machines for spraying fields of five acres or less. For larger plantations more powerful machines should be used.
