TORNADO REGIONS.

Last week's mad romp of the destructive spirits of the air imparts special interest to an official paper on the tornado history of the United States by Lieut. Finley of the weather bureau, and just now summarized by the Chicago Times-Herald. This history is of course not complete for the period named—one hundred years—it necessarily could not be, since the western half of the continent was hardly known at all at the time the compilation of material for the work began, the year 1794. But it shows very plainly that there are certain sections peculiarly subject to tornado visitations, while other sections are almost absolutely exempt. The former area of greatest frequency is a narrow space between the meridians 89 and 101 degrees and between latitudes 36 and 41 degrees north, and includes parts of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, and the eastern edge of Indiana. This is, therefore, called the tornado district par excellence. The district of next greatest frequency is New York, and then comes Georgia.

Noting six hundred tornadoes which have occurred, principally during the last thirty years when records and observations have been more accurately kept, the weather historian remarks that their average length was about twenty-eight miles and their average width about a thousand feet; they have varied in length from two miles to two hundred and fifty, the former species being called "bouncers," while the width has varied from a few yards to nearly a mile. If in the table given below Dakota means the two states since formed, it will be seen that not a single state east of us has escaped entirely these terrible visitations, while to the west of our longitude the only exemptions are in the case of Oregon and Washington. Utah, of course, does not figure in the table at all—the tornado or cyclone hath no place in our history. Our northern neighbor, Idaho, is equally fortunate, but the destroyer has whirled all around us on every side. The following table, to which should be added Colorado, California, Indian Territory, Nevada, New Mexico, Montana, Rhode Island, West Virginia and Wyoming, with one each, will be interesting as showing where Lieut. Finley found his nearly six hundred tornadoes, and also as showing where Kansas gets its reputation:

Kansas	[illegible]	Mississippi	14

THE COUNCILMANIC DECISION.

The State Supreme court has settled finally the dispute as to whether Wm. M. Elliott or B. T. Lloyd is the rightful occupant of the office of councilman from the Third municipal ward, made vacant by the death of the late Joseph M. Watson. The court's decision will probably now be submitted to, and Mr. Lloyd, in whose favor it is, ought to take his seat in the City Council at its next session. In him the people of the Third municipal ward will have a representative who will conscientiously promote their interests as an important part of the city.

As to the chief legal question involved in the case, and now settled beyond controversy, the News has had nothing to say, being satisfied to await the court's finding, and content in believing that the decision is right. But as to the disregard of judicial action shown since the district court made its finding and issued its injunction, we have expressed our view heretofore, and feel to do so again, because by that disregard the city treasury is unlawfully mulcted of a portion of its contents. By the decision just made, Councilman Lloyd is entitled to his full salary for the entire period of the usurpation of the office, accomplished through the mistaken act of the City Council in attempting to fill a place that was not vacant. Such mistakes are likely to occur, hence we find no fault with the condition that existed up to the time the district court issued its injunction order in favor of Mr. Lloyd. But the proceeding since that time to pay-trate a person enjoined from doing anything relative to an office the salary for that office is an outrage on the taxpayers of the city. It is no excuse to say that the sum thus paid is not large—there is no difference as to principle whether it is $1 or $1,000.

By the order of the district court, Mr. Elliott was enjoined from acting as councilman; he was forbidden to receive the salary. The city officials who have the handling out of salaries also were enjoined by the effect of the court's order, from paying any to Mr. Elliott. The plea that his undertaking on appeal superseded the court's command as far as Mr. Elliott was concerned has been shown conclusively to be wrong; a bond on appeal does not act as a supersedeas to an injunction—as the highest tribunal in the land says, and this rule was published as full notice to the parties concerned of the status of the case. Whatever the excuse Mr. Elliott might have even under that plea cannot be made to reach the city officials, since they took no steps to be relieved of the court's mandate. The proper way was to have withheld the salary until the higher court rendered its decision.

Under this condition, there should be some action to return to the city treasury the money wrongfully paid out. This business of handing cash to the wrong city officials has been paralleled before, and if not checked may be repeated again, so it is worth while to stop it now. In this case, if the finance committee of the Council endorsed the payroll for money to go to Mr. Elliott since the injunction by the district court, then that committee ought to be required to make good the shortage for which it is responsible. If the burden is on some other official, the amount should be required at his hands. There are many of the office holding and office seeking fraternity who appear to believe that getting funds from the public treasury is quite legitimate so long as it can be done without criminal prosecution following; but contempt of a judicial order and disregard of the common rule of honesty goes too far when it comes to making clearly unlawful payments from the public monies squeezed from property owners already overburdened with taxation.

AN UNSEEMLY SPECTACLE.

If there is anything that can bring into discredit the non-partisan system of controlling police and fire departments, it is the method of maladministration that is being carried on in the police and fire commission in this city. There is not the slightest similarity between the way the system is intended to be operated and the way in which it is being done. The fault is not with the system—that is clearly established by experience elsewhere; it is in the failure on the part of officials to carry out the spirit of the law under which they hold office.

This continued farcical business in the Salt Lake commission is more than undignified; it is becoming disgusting. We say nothing as to the motives of the members of the commission; but the spectacle they present of dodging and seeking for advantage one over the other is far from being either entertaining or satisfactory, and does not tend to exalt them in the esteem of the community. In all friendliness we suggest that other tactics be adopted, whereby the community may be spared the humiliation of longer witnessing this almost constant squabbling.

As to which side, if either, is right in the contest which divides the commission, we are not expressing any opinion. But we do believe that the head of such an important branch of the public service as the police and fire departments ought to be operated on a square, manly, straightforward basis; and neither observation nor experience shows that that is done in sharp practices which seek to trick or trap anybody. In a fair administration of the law no member of the commission should ever feel that he was being taken advantage of, and should not have to resort to unusual tactics to protect himself. On the other hand there is such a thing as being content with a dignified protest and not skulking like a coward. It is about time that the members of the commission begin to display a courteous consideration toward each other and set an example that will not be wholly demoralizing to the departments they are expected to control.

WAR OR PEACE?

In London there is just now a growing conviction that the British government is only at the beginning of its troubles in South Africa. Every sign seems to indicate the approach of race troubles both in the Orange Free State, the Transvaal and Cape Colony. The parliament of the first-named country, now in session, is considering a proposition virtually to deprive all uitlanders of the franchise. The Boers propose to distribute arms among the burghers to the extent of providing every boy over twelve years of age with a gun, and to store up ammunition to the amount of 4,000,000 rounds. The frontiers are to be fortified ostensibly as a measure of precaution against Africans. On the other hand the English colonists are indulging in meetings and inflammatory speeches. Their speakers insist on the necessity of preparing for resistance of any attempt to curtail their liberties. The home government is being criticised for its supposed cowardice as shown in its South African policy.

How long this strained state of affairs can last without causing an actual rupture is impossible to say, but the conclusion seems irresistible that a race war is on which eventually will call for interference by the British government.

Nor is South Africa the only source of trouble to England. The Turkish question continually rises to the surface. The recent atrocities in Crete remind the world that harmony cannot be established between the followers of the Cross and the Crescent, at least not until the time shall have come when the lamb and the lion can lie down together in perfect peace. In the case of the occurrences at Canea it is pointed out that Lord Salisbury cannot plead inability to deal with the perpetrators of the murders. They are within easy reach of the guns of the English fleet. To fail to act in the matter will be regarded as a repudiation of the responsibility undertaken by England in relation to the sultan's Christian subjects.

The political sky, although comparatively calm, has a decidedly cloudy aspect. The bright spot is the effort of the friends of peace to bring about a more rational mode of settling international questions than those hitherto resorted to. Notable in this effort is the plan of influential French women, who have formed a Woman's League for General Disarmament, at the head of which stands Mme. Flammarion, wife of the celebrated astronomer. This field of work is particularly one in which women should be interested, and it is safe to say that if once wives, mothers and sisters grasp the idea and realize their power to turn thought and sentiment into new channels, the day cannot be far off when all the vexed international questions will be referred to intelligent and just arbitration rather than to brute force. May the angels of peace succeed!

WOMEN ARE PERSONS.

At last it has been discovered that the persistent agitation carried on for about forty years in order to obtain for women the right of franchise by an addition to the Constitution, is entirely uncalled for. It is now claimed that that wonderful instrument of human freedom gives that right to the gentler sex as freely and unreservedly as to man. W. S. Harwood in the North American Review takes this view of the matter and gives his reasons for it.

Article XIV, which has been in force since July, 1868, reads:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The author mentioned argues that this article clearly defines citizens as persons born or naturalized in the United States, and accords to all such, irrespective of sex, equal political privileges.

The next amendment, declared to be in force in 1870, reads:

> The rights of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

This amendment, it is pointed out, gives the women of the colored race the undoubted right to vote in the United States, since it expressly specifies that citizens formerly in bondage are accorded this privilege, and "citizens" are defined as "persons" born or naturalized in the Republic. The only question is therefore whether the women are "persons," and according to the unanimous testimony of lexicographers, that fact cannot be denied.

It is further pointed out that the question may be of great importance in the coming presidential election. There are some states in which the women will cast their votes for presidential electors. What will be done with the votes of these states? Will they be rejected in spite of the fact that they are cast under the sanction of the state laws? In case the election should be very close, these questions would be exceedingly interesting.

Mr. Harwood concludes that the right to vote can be denied the women only by the adoption of a constitutional amendment declaring that male citizens alone have the privileges contemplated in the granting of American citizenship.

THE SMALLEST NATION.

Some of the encyclopedias and many newspapers have commented on the smallest independent country in the world, and have given the credit therefor to either Andorra or San Marino. A late issue of the Westminster Gazette takes these authorities to task, declaring that they are mistaken as to the government which can lay claim to being the smallest independent territory on the globe, and says that the position belongs to Tavorala, an islet off the northwest coast of Sardinia. Its size is three miles long and three quarters of a mile broad, and its population numbers exactly 55 souls. From 1836 to 1882 the islet was governed by one Paolino, who had all the authority of a king, but when he died in the latter year he advised the inhabitants to form a republic, which was done. All the adult islanders, women equally with men, have votes, and every six years a president is elected for that period. Nominally the island is claimed by Italy, but no attempt is made to exercise any control from there or from the near island of Sardinia.
