SOME FREAK CASES IN CIVIL COURTS

Collecting Agencies Are at Bottom of Two-Thirds of Small Disputes Aired.

SUITS FIFTEEN YEARS OLD.

Case of Man Who Loaned Fifty Cents To Friend and It Cost Him $5 to Collect.

Like a parasite, the collecting agency is at the bottom of two-thirds of the small disputes which find their way into the civil courts. They are so small that the individual would never think of going into court for the costs, service and attorney's fees more than equal many of the judgments entered. But these claims are mostly just, and here is the collecting agency ready and willing to take the case to court no matter how small or how large the debt might be.

Often the collecting agency is used as a medium of spite work to harrass and bother some poor unfortunate. But this is not generally the case. It sometimes takes years to settle a dispute over a board bill, a grocery bill, a meat bill or a doctor's bill but some day it is generally settled. The collecting agency like a cat watching a mouse, renews the judgment and keeps it fresh so that when one has a dollar in change it is grabbed up and credited to a board bill 10 years old.

The civil division of the city court is swamped with small cases and many of them are 10 or 15 years od. In looking over the files, the clerk's docket shows that about 60 per cent of the suits are for grocery bills and meat bills. Then comes the merchant in dry goods and the professional man follows as a close third, while the remainder is composed of miscellaneous bills good and bad.

DIVIDES HIS CAPITAL.

John Jamesson, a laborer, owed a grocery bill of long standing and was brought into court on a citation for the tenth time about a week ago. He denied that he was in a position to liquidate the bill saying that he did not have a dollar he could call his own.

"Well," asked the attorney, "haven't you got a cent of money? How do you live anyway?"

"This is all I have got to my name," Jamesson said, digging down into his pocket and pulling out two silver dollars, "and this is all that stands be-tween me and starvation."

"If the court please," the attorney said, "I think that the defendant ought to be required to pay half of the amount on the judgment."

It was so ordered and Jamesson has another dollar to his credit on a bill he claims he did not owe and which has cost him several jobs because his wages were garnished.

SMALLEST SUIT ON RECORD.

R. E. Anderson did the "rush act" on his friend M. Hempill, and the latter loaned him 50 cents which he needed for a day. It was borrowed on Oct. 19, 1908, and two months later after making several efforts to collect it, he turned the account over to the collecting agency which will take half of it for the trouble of collecting it. The service will cost $1.20 and by the time judgment is entered the costs will probably reach about $4.50.

This is the smallest amount ever sued for in the city court. There has been dozens of suits for $1 and $2 by merchants, who submit dozens of accounts for collection but never an individual account.

ACTRESS AS HOSTESS.

As an unwelcome reminder of the festive occasions they had together, Ramsey Wallace, an actor, was served with a suit brough by Miss Callie Gates, an actress in Willard Mack's company, to recover $14.85. This had been loaned by the charming young actress when Wallace was broke. Some of it represents lunches they had together, wich Miss Gates paid for, on the trip across the continent. When judgment was entered interest had accumulated to the amount of fifteen cents and Wallace was assessed $15 and $3.45 for costst.

SEQUEL TO "JOY RIDE".

J. R. Levy and R. W. Levy, brothers, went for a "joy ride" in an automobile with A. E. White when he sold the machine to S. C. Sherrill. After the sale was made the Levys filed suit to recover $150 as a commission for helping to sell the machine. It took two days to hear the case. At the conclusion, the action was dismissed and the Levys were assessed $3.40, the costst of the suit.

TRAGEDY OF A STOVE.

C. F. Durand purchased a stove from E. W. Madson, a hardware dealer in Murray at the request of his wife which was to be just like here neighbor's, Mrs. Jones. When the stove came it did not have quiet as many ornaments and then the flues did not work as well. At the request of his wife, Durand took the stove back and placed it on the sidewalk in front of Madson's store. Before Madson discovered it, a neighbor took charge of it, fearing that somebody would steal it. Madson filed suit against Durand and his wife for the price of the stove which they refused to pay for. Durand fought the case but judgment was rendered against him for $43.20. In the trial Durand denied that he had possession of the stove saying that he had taken it back because it was not the right kind of a stove.

THE NEXT DAY IT SNOWED.

Paul Smith borrowed a rain coat from P. B. Rogers and when the latter demanded it, Smith offered to buy it. The purchase price agreed on was $6. Then Rogers demanded the money but unable to get it brought suit. He was awarded $6.44 judgmeent against Smith.

BILL OF PARTICULARS.

There are domestic troubles which the civil courts are called upon to settle. For instance, Mrs. Janet Matthews was awarded the furniture in the house after she had secured a divorce from Albert G. Matthews. In her suit filed in the court she demanded possession of about seven hundred articles. Unless the goods are delivered she asks for judgment for $25 and in her affidavit she enumerated what belonged to her. She even wanted the stove poker, a china pot, a pair of garters, a kimono, a tub and wringer and some gingham rags.

These are only a few of the cases picked up in the files that the mill terms off every day in th court. The calender is filled with petty troubles for months ahead and there are more troubles coming in every day. There is a rule—the Golden rule—that would obviate all the difficulties in this court but just at present the collecting agency will do the doing.

SALT LAKE TO GET PLENTY OF MONEY

Darwin E. Kingsley Says His Company Will Invest About $400,000 Here.

THIS TO BE BUT BEGINNING.

Luncheon at Commercial Club Occasion for Some Good Boosting for The City of Opportunities.

The luncheon tendered yesterday by the governing board of the Commercial club to Darwin E. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance company, was one of the most successful affairs of the kind given by that organization in a long time. A number of prominent business men were present to meet the guest of honor, and speeches were made that must have convinced Mr. Kingsley that Salt Lake is in every way worthy of receiving a large quota of the surplus money of the big insurance concern intended to be invested in real estate mortgages. Before the close of the speechmaking President Kingsley announced that his company would in the near future place from $300,000 to $400,000 here, and that would be but the beginning of wont might be expected to follow.

President W. J. Halloran of the Commercial club, presided at the luncheon, and made a short address of welcome. He spoke of the fact that notwithstanding the unprecedented amount of building that is going on, it is almost impossible to supply the demands for store rooms and shops, to say nothing of the constant lack of residences. In the 20 years that he had been loaning money in this state, he had never lost a dollar, said Mr. Halloran.

Mayor J. S. Bransford spoke along the same lines, told of the splendid water system that the people own, and called attention to the phenomenal growth of the city.

Judge E. F. Colborn and John Dern made felicitous speeches, the former on the incomparable location of Salt Lake, and the latter on the mining industry of the state.

The policy of the company which he represents was outlined by Mr. Kingsley, the intention being to invest perhaps $2,000,000 in real estate mortgages in the near future. Such loans had always been advised by him, as they were safe and at the same time drew a better interest than most other loans. No demand made upon the company would be too great for it to meet, he said, and in closing he expressed his satisfaction with conditions existing in Salt Lake.

Those receiving invitations to the luncheon were:

Darwin P. Kingsley, J. H. Mays, W. S. McCornick, George Sutherland, John C. Cutier, E. F. Colborn, W. V. Rice, C. N. Strevell, W. Mont Ferry, D. C. Jackling, M. H. Walker, C. C. Parsons, E. I. Devlin, C. S. Burton, R. E. Miller, Ira H. Lewis, A. W. Carlson, J. E. Caine, H. L. A. Culmer, John Dern, Frank Knox, Thomas Kearns, David Keith, Heber M. Wells, T. G. Webber, O. W. Powers, Gilbert A. Smith, J. Frank Judge, A. J. Davis, F. D. Clift, Joseph Meltzer, W. J. Halloran, Joy H. Johnson, J. S. Bransford, H. P. Clark, Samuel Newhouse, Samuel Weitz and Fisher Harris.

AMUSEMENTS

Theater—"I am not of the killing kind."

So says the husband of the Comptesse Coquette in the last act, and this is the whole story. Fond, kind, faithful, but slow to the verge of stupedity, what could this husband expect than that his Comptesse—beautiful, soulful, emotional, should look where she could and would for the thrill, the spice, the tingling life whose longing is in every motion, every smile and sigh, every glance of the untamed creature who is his wife? She does it really, or makes you see that she does it by absolute compulsion; for the comptesse though a coquette, loves her husband and no one else, and is so sure of her own integrity that she threatens that if a thought of her faithlessness ever comes to him she will lose no time in making it true.

"I am here, we are alone together, new tempt me," she says to the man who has induced her to come to his house. It is no lure, no challenge—simply the expression of a great curiosity. "Let me see if there is anything you can do to give me an emotion or to amuse me. I am here to be entertained." And before this hopeless attitude, the aplomb, the self-confidence of the blasse admirer goes down in ignominious defeat.

And the poor husband! If one cringes involuntarily at the humiliation of the would be lover, absolute anguish obtains for this abject other one, when after she has won him with indifference, and a thousand wiles of coquetry into forgetfulness, she taunts him with the weakness which has made him forgive his fancied wrong.

"Why did you not kill him?" she asks. But it has all been told, even before his verbal confession; told in the scene in the first act, whose one scene consists in the play of the comptesse's shoulders, as she sits on the divan behind her husband and while he remains outwardly insensible to her presence. It is told in the third act when she beholds him passionate for the first time in his fear lest he shall lose her and tells him that she has each day for two weeks past pressed his foot with hers under the tea table, and he has made no response. When she has revealed this secret, he manfully takes heed and carefully places his own foot in a convenient position for this coveted coquetery. They are at the tea table and the comptesse observing this elphantine play for her notice, tilts up the teapot and pours tea on the outstretched foot. And so on through out the play—which is in reality made up almost entirely of these bits of detail in acting and stage business. Without them the play is nothing. Three quarters of an hour would be ample time for the dialogue in the three acts. But this all rebounds inevitably, of course, to the art of the actress, who with smile, frown, gesture, and a hundred graces of acting and personality, keeps one's vivid interest alive through all. This art, personality or rather both together makes Nazimova—and she is all. She would be this in plays providing rivalry but it detracts nothing from her laurels that the support with her is only average; to make the barrenness of plot and surrounding personalities blossom into breathless interest with her individual art, is a final test of power to which she responds with superb satisfaction, and the audience demands no more.
