TAILORMADE LINEN WAIST FOR FALL.

Women have not grown weary of washable waists. For general utility wear it would be difficult to persuade them to adopt anything that could not be laundered. The very thin effects in lingerie waists that doubtless be worn all through the winter for indoor occasions. Where more warmth and greater protection is desired, the washable shirt waists in white linen or of the finer white velvets and memorized novelties will be made up into plain tailored effects. After all is said and done there is no waist that has better style than the tailored waist of washable material. Some of the new models express in a most satisfactory way this idea, the extremely plain having almost in every instance the small skirt sleeve and the narrow cuff bands. They will be worn with the simple linen collar and with linen belts. Getting away from the conventional shirt model and yet well on the tailored and simple effects, some of these washable shirt waists are being made with plaited fronts. This plaiting is sometimes continued across the shoulders in the form of a narrow yoke or sleeve cap. A slight fullness is added by means of narrow tucks, and when drawn into the belt at the waist is not allowed to drop in blouse style, as it has been formerly. Every effort is made to give the figure a neater, trimmer look. Belts and stocks to be worn with waists of this sort are in endless design. Some of the belts are hand embroidered in the eyelet pattern. The belts are of medium width and fastened in the front with a simple buckle. In the stitched turnover linen collar some new designs are being shown, among which are those with the beaded border. These little turn-over collars are worn with masculine looking neckties made of colored silk. The neckties match in color tone the coat of the skirt with which such shirt waists are worn.

CLUB CHAT.

In connection with the removal of the body of Paul Jones to America, the Providence Journal remarks that one who did much to finally bring about the event has been overlooked. This is Miss Marion Howard Brader of Boston, who, according to the paper referred to, is a person "than whom few have done so much in arousing interest in the search for the naval hero's resting-place. Miss Brader is a prominent member of the New England Women's Press association, and is prominent in the Daughters of the American Revolution circles, besides being on the staff of several papers and magazines. This gave opportunity to keep the name of John Paul Jones before the public, and she lost not a single chance. As the one woman who honored the memory of John Paul Jones by founding and naming a chapter for him, it is especially fitting that she should be the official representative of the Massachusetts Daughters of the American Revolution, at the exercises held in Annapolis, where the body is consigned to what it is hoped will be its last resting-place. Besides naming the chapter, Miss Brader was successful in having a Boston schoolhouse called after the hero who had so aroused her interest, and she also raised money with which to purchase a bronze tablet for its walls. It is therefore safe to say that few of the many who participate in the services at Annapolis will do so with a more intense personal interest than will the women who for years worked to bring them about. It should furnish food for reflection to those who consider the woman suffrage movement to be the enemy of the homely virtues of good housekeeping. To learn that the two suffrage societies of Utah and Colorado, have established departments of domestic economy in their respective state universities, and that the head of the Colorado department is president of the Woman's Suffrage association in her own state.

Arrows of the woman suffrage convention just closed at Portland, Or., the following extract from an editorial published in the Portland Oregonian is significant, considering that the paper has been a consistent "anti" for many years. "It is not necessary to agree with the ideas underlying this convention and its presentation to the public in order that the intelligence and sincerity of those who carry its message may be recognized and the ability with which it is urged respected. The fair and open hearing to which every citizen of the United States is entitled for his or her presentation of a great question is given to the advocates of woman suffrage. Public ridicule, social ostracism, petty persecutions, no longer prevail against it. The body that carries its banner and wears its colors is a representative body of men and women in current literature, in philanthropy and in some of the learned professions. As such their opinions are entitled to respect, and what many of them will have to say will be well worth hearing."
