OBITUARY NOTES.

OGDEN, Feb. 19, 1894.—Two more veteran workers in the Gospel have passed to the great beyond, to continue their labors in a higher sphere among their kindred who have preceded them to the spirit world. Thus our ranks are being thinned out and the generations now growing up will soon know those only as belonging to the historic past. The first of these two is

PATRICK WILLIAM SMITH.

He was born about 1806, at Hinckley, Leicestershire, England. The month and day of his birth I have not been able to ascertain. When grown to manhood he removed to the old manorial town of Whitwick, Leicestershire, where, over forty years since, he heard the Gospel in its fulness preached by the Elders of Israel. He accepted their testimony, and was in his life with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and continued faithful to his convictions to the end of his mortality.

While in his native land he labored faithfully testifying of the great things that has done for him, and that He has revealed the true plan of salvation, and has again offered the human family an opportunity to embrace it and be saved. He was kind and generous to the Elders and assisted them to the fullest [illegible] with his means.

In 1871 he emigrated to Utah, and finally settled in Ogden, where he became known and respected by all wherever he was known. On February 11th, after a long, lingering illness, during which he was a great but patient sufferer, he breathed his last.

The funeral was held on the 13th inst. and was numerously attended. The speakers on the occasion bore testimony to his worth and fidelity as a Saint of God both here and in his native land. His posterity consisted of twelve children and six grandchildren, who are still increasing.

The next one of whom I have to speak is a veteran lady who has seen much service, and has for many years been a faithful and constant worker in the female institutions of the Church.

SISTER ALICE HILL

Departed this life February 11, 1894. She was the daughter of James Mellor and Mary Hardman, she was born at Oldham, Lancashire, England, April 27, 1811. Her family and herself were formerly members of the old Wesleyan body of religious worshippers for many years. In the year 1840, she was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In 1836 she was married to John Woolstenholme, by whom she had three sons and one daughter. In 1842 her husband died, leaving her with three small children to provide for.

In 1843 she married the second time, her husband being named George Rhodes. The same year they took passage on the ship Margaret and sailed for the United States.

The voyage was long, exceedingly rough, and they suffered much for the lack of bread and fresh water. They landed at St. Louis, Mo., in Feb. 1844. The issue of this marriage was one daughter who survives her parents. During the summer of 1849, her second husband was prostrated by a sunstroke which proved fatal. He survived the shock but a very short time. Alice Rhodes was thus again deprived of her natural protector, and was also for the second time left a widow, to toil for her children's subsistence in a strange land among strangers. She trusted in God and believed that He would provide for her and she was not disappointed.

On November 3, 1850, she was united to a third husband, Thomas Hill. They were married in St. Louis, Mo. By this husband she had three children, all daughters. She survived her last husband seven years.

On May 29, 1853, the family left St. Louis per steamboat for Kanesville, which place they reached in due time. After being detained one month in consequence of high water they commenced their overland journey for Utah, in Captain Moses Clawson's company. They reached Salt Lake City September 23rd. They remained in the capital till 1856, then moved to Kay's Ward, Davis county, and the following year came to Ogden, which place they made their permanent home. Here they shared the poverty of the hard winter and subsequent seasons. They pulled up stakes and "moved south" with the body of the Church in the eventful year of 1858. On their return they united with their co-religionists to build up the Junction city in this inter-mountain region.

As soon as the people had raised a little from their narrow means, Sister Alice Hill united with a number of others and commenced her laborious service of mercy, ministering to the wants of the needy. She never tired of doing good. Night and day she was always on hand to respond to calls of this kind. Many a day, and all day long, toiling beneath the melting heat of summer, or encountering the chilling blasts of the winter winds, she cheerfully prosecuted these labors of love in connection with Sisters Mary Ann Ellis and Kerr Davies—the latter now dead. The hungry, the naked, the sick and the dying experienced the benefits that were administered by these angelic ministers. This was not the work of a few days or a month, but it continued for nearly a decade and a half.

For over thirteen years Sister Hill was first counselor to Sister Ellis, president of the Second Ward Relief Society. She was constant in the discharge of her duties. She was an able counselor, a wise and wise adviser and always had a kind word for those of her sisters who were disconsolate from any cause. Her associates always experienced pleasure in her society, and strength from her conversations. She was beloved by all who knew her.

The funeral services were held on the 14th inst., in the Second ward meeting house, Bishop Robert McQuarrie presided. The attendance was very large. A new feature was introduced at the services, that in addition to the Elders who spoke on the occasion, the vast assembly was addressed by Sister Jane S. Richards, president of the Relief Society of the Weber stake, Sister Mary Ann Ellis, president of the Second ward society, and Sister Maria L. Newman, a co-worker with them. These ladies, who had for many years been intimately acquainted with the deceased, spoke from the fulness of their hearts of the life and labors of their beloved friend. There was nothing formal in the encomiums and high tribute paid by them to her memory.

The remains were interred in the Ogden cemetery.

Sister Hill has had eight children, fifty-seven grandchildren and twenty-six great-grandchildren, many of whom survive her. Yours truly,

JOSEPH HALL.

A well-known railroad man told the following story the other day—at least the Anaconda, Mont., Standard states so: "When I was at Mandan, N. D., we had a man whose memory of car numbers was really remarkable. When a train whistled into the yard he would step to the platform, and, without a book or pencil, would stand and watch the cars go by. If any one was standing near he would converse upon some ever subject required, and when the conversation was ended he would step into his office and make a complete and accurate record of the train, beginning at the first car and ending with the caboose. Sometimes, just to test him, we would ask him to begin at the caboose and write the numbers the other way, or else begin in the middle of the train and work both ways. He never made a mistake that I remember. Car numbers, the names of the roads to which they belonged and their relative position in the train would all be recorded accurately. His was the most remarkable memory that I ever knew of."
