PLAYFULNESS THAT KILLS.

Those boys whose love of practical joking is responsible for the death of a respected and aged citizen, Adam Rich, as related in our local columns, surely must feel very uncomfortable when they consider the results of their handiwork. An unoffending man, against whom none of them can have serious complaint for any act he ever did, might now be enjoying his usual health if it had not been for the attempted perpetration of a joke which has resulted in a tragedy. But this uncomfortable or sorrowful feeling on the part of the boys cannot restore to life the veteran whose body now awaits interment; it cannot remove the grief that has bowed down an aged wife and mother and loving children. Death has done its work through the agency of an inexcusable, an abominable practice.

This may not be an occasion to discourse on the criminality of such joking as may easily result in the loss of life or limb; whether it is or not, we have no inclination to attempt it. We merely wish to point out a sad result of boyish pranks of this character, and to inquire of parents and citizens generally if the practical joking that has been complained of so much of late in different parts of the city is to go unchecked. Surely the limit of forbearance has been passed when the practice accomplishes the destruction of human life; and from this time on its indulgence in by the boys should be met by measures of repression.

LAW AND AUTHORITY.

The News is in receipt of several communications from persons in the East, advocating anarchistic principles. One of the letters is from a lady. The correspondents all agree that this journal, in its reference to anarchism some time ago, hardly treated that "philosophical system" with impartiality, and they ask for space for explanations. The letters received, however, are but repetitions of the statements made by Mr. Whittier, already published in the News, and can have no further interest to the general readers of this paper.

One of the principles involved in the controversy between the professed disciples of Proudhon and society is that as to law and authority. On this point one of the correspondents expresses himself explicitly enough when he says:

We demand that no law shall ever be enforced by violence except laws against the criminal use of violence. We do not, as anarchists, object to the use of violence in suppressing violence, nor to the making of any law whatever on any subject so long as the means used to enforce it are not violent.

Which is, if words mean anything, another way of saying that, according to the principles of anarchism, everybody must be allowed to do pretty much whatever he chooses, for if laws cannot be enforced, they are utterly useless, as a great number of men and women are constituted in this world.

It is a great error to suppose that the object of law and of the exercise of authority is merely of a prohibitive nature, or a barrier against violence. It has a much higher purpose, being much rather aimed at the education of the human family. "That which is governed by law is also preserved by law, and perfected and sanctified by the same," while that which "seeketh to become a law unto itself" cannot be sanctified by "law, neither by mercy, justice nor judgment," is a profoundly philosophical doctrine, setting forth the true reason why submission to law and authority is necessary. It is the only way by which human beings can be preserved and perfected. It is to the moral character what training is to the intellect.

And the fact is that even imperfect laws—laws of human origin always [illegible] the power of forming a morally strong and healthy character, so long as they are submitted to and administered with justice and mercy. The most primitive laws of society in [illegible] stages have had the effect of educating or perfecting that society until higher laws could be received. History, both sacred and profane, shows this to be true. Mankind has gradually progressed under the tuition of [illegible] authority, notwithstanding all imperfections and failures, and it will continue to progress until the very highest laws can be comprehended and obeyed. But advancement will never result in emancipation from authority, nor in each individual being his own lawmaker. To the human being that would be as disastrous as the suspension of the law of gravitation to the universe would be to the earth. It would mean ruin, destruction. It would be also strictly applied to the planetary system.

No greater mischief, or more far-reaching in its results, can be done to society than the illegal tearing asunder of the rules by which it is governed, whether this be done by those who, in defiance, place themselves outside its domain, or by those who are entrusted with the guardianship of the law and yet, for selfish purposes, administer it without regard to justice. Probably [illegible] are the worst class of anarchists extant, all the more dangerous because of the trusted positions they hold. Against both the laws must be enforced, whether the authority to do so is as a last resort vested in the people, as in this country, or in a few individuals, or in even one person, as in other countries. Any other course will assuredly lead to fatal consequences.

LOST THROUGH LIQUOR.

The terrible disaster at Denver by which one of its largest hotels was laid in ruins, and by which many lives were lost under most distressing circumstances and many persons seriously injured, was caused by an explosion. According to all accounts, the engineer to whose care the responsible work of attending the boilers was entrusted was a young boy habitually intoxicated. He is said to have turned a large quantity of water into the hot boilers and then left the building before the disaster occurred, and the inference is that while he was away drinking, the steam accumulated that finally exploded and sent so many into eternity without a moment's warning.

The authorities are, of course, looking for this young man with a view to calling him to account for his neglect and carelessness, and it is to be hoped an example can be made of him to others who voluntarily deprive themselves of their reason by means of intoxicants, while in the performance of duties on which the safety of life and property depends. At the same time it is difficult to justify the owner or manager of the hotel in keeping this boy in a responsible position, although they knew, it seems, his enslavement to the whisky habit and consequent instability. Grave responsibility certainly rests on those who employ such men and keep them after their disposition is known. Neither on railroads, street cars, nor in any place where the life of others may be endangered through neglect, should any man find employment unless he is known to shun intoxicants in any form.

THE STILLWELL CASE.

With the indictment of Dr. and Mrs. Hearne for the murder of Stillwell at Hannibal, Mo., in December, 1888, interest has been revived in that case with all its attendant circumstances of intrigue, mystery and horror. The present result is due to a $100,000 libel suit against a San Francisco paper, brought by Dr. Joseph C. Hearne, of San Diego, who has, it appears, been twice married to and once divorced from the widow of Stillwell, the murdered millionaire. It was for certain statements published regarding the murder of Stillwell, in connection with the divorce proceedings between Dr. and Mrs. Hearne at San Diego, that the libel suit was instituted. Dr. Hearne, at the time of the murder, lived in Hannibal, and was a widower, with two daughters. In less than a year after the crime he married the widow of the murdered man. Shortly afterward they removed to St. Joseph, and subsequently to California.

Several grand juries have formerly tried to secure evidence in order to connect somebody with the mysterious murder, but there always seemed to be something clogging the wheels of justice. But within the last few weeks, testimony has been forthcoming of a damaging character to the parties now charged with the crime, and there is every indication that one of Missouri's notable murder mysteries will be solved and justice done, in some measure at least. The other case of a similar character, that of Snell, the alleged victim of Tascott, wherever he may be, still rests where it was at first, notwithstanding the reward of $50,000 offered for the capture of the slayer of that millionaire.

SPRINKLING ELSEWHERE.

A correspondent of the News has called attention several times to the injudicious manner in which street sprinkling is sometimes done in this city, whereby the roadway is converted into mud puddles. Since he has pointed out this evil it has been remedied in some sections, and the sprinkler nuisance [illegible] have [illegible] some [illegible]. Elsewhere people also have been afflicted by injudicious water cart handlers, as may be seen by the following, written by a Springfield Mass., correspondent upon his vision being greeted by a watering cart:

As I was whisking [illegible] I came upon [illegible]—a broken-down water cart. "[illegible]" I said to [illegible] and [illegible]—but it [illegible]—and I paused to [illegible] thrust away by its aqueous belly—sheepishly [illegible] in its own mind. The horses were gone, the driver was gone, and the great monster—[illegible] from its [illegible] like a huge and dropsical swine, [illegible] where the [illegible] which it had [illegible]. "[illegible]" I muttered, in [illegible] and [illegible]. "[illegible] than to the [illegible] hast covered, and [illegible] the [illegible] coward! No kind Aquarius hast thou been, [illegible] the very dusts—but a deluge, and a scourge, [illegible] the public streets and turning the highways to a bog. [illegible] art thou fallen, and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] May the omen save!"

Notwithstanding the improvement which has been made here there is still occasion for many people to wish for the omen of a broken-down water cart to make its operator realize his wastefulness in overdoing that which in moderation is a great comfort and consolation in dry weather. The public yet needs protection from a few [illegible], incapable and [illegible] sprinkling cart operators.

It is announced that the Turkish minister of public works has decided to reconstruct the aqueduct which supplied Jerusalem with water in the days of King Solomon. Some years ago, an English philanthropist only offered to do this work [illegible] the [illegible], provided the authorities would agree to keep the aqueduct in repair, but they refused then, alleging that the expenses of repairing might come too high.

The attention given to the reorganization of bankrupt railroad companies is taken to be one of the most pronounced features of the present revival of business.

The [illegible] Saved His Life.

Mr. G. [illegible], Druggist, Beatersville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again.
