HE WARNS AMERICA.

Herr Wilhelm von Kardoff the German Statesman on Bimetallism.

UNITED STATES SHOULD LEAD OUT.

Says Its Intelligent, Brave and Industrious People Should Not Falter in Their Silver Faith.

New York Journal: Herr Wilhelm von Kardoff is the leader of the bimetallist party in the Prussian Diet and one of the most brilliant orators in Germany. He is a profound student of economics, and ranks with Arendt as one of the two leading German authorities on monetary science. It will be seen that Von Kardoff, like Arendt, believes that free coinage by the United States will be the means of restoring the bimetallic system in Europe.

WARSAW, Illinois, Aug. 3—In accordance with your request, I herewith send you my views on the practical realization of bimetallism, which has broken out in the United States.

Allow me to say beforehand that, after two decades of comprehensive, thorough theoretical and practical study of the coinage question, I still hold the great principle which your distinguished countryman, Mr. Henry Carey, upheld against his good fanatics when he wrote:

"President Lincoln has established the axiom 'Everything of the people, by the people and by the people.' The gold advocates have accepted the principle: 'Everything of the money-lenders, for the money lenders and by the money lenders.'"

The legislative bodies of all great commercial nations have, by large majorities, passed resolutions which demand an international regulation of the money standard question in the interest of the producing classes, in the interest of political economy, in the interest of a healthy advance in wages and in the interest of international trade. These resolutions are on record in the United States Congress, the French Chambers, the German Reichstag, the Prussian Chambers and the English House of Commons. A large number of smaller countries have joined in the good movement, such as Holland, Belgium, etc.

Why are there thus far no practical results to these devout desires? Why does not success crown so yet the many bimetallic congresses? Because the capitalists of the whole world are allied against us as one man, and money still reigns supreme.

"We should be big fools," said Sir William Harcourt, in Parliament, "if we Englishmen, the creditors of the whole world, should assent to a change of our gold standard."

With these words he has candidly uttered the heartfelt sentiment of the capitalistic fraternity, who are united in France, England, Germany, America and other lands in defense of the gold standard. The tenacity of two mighty octopus have captured the most influential and most powerful newspapers of the civilized world, have fastened their grip on the cabinets, ministers and high officials of ruling society, who are more in thrall the permanent will of parliaments.

These conditions will not change, despite the theoretic agreement of reason, of parliaments and congresses, until in some country an intrepid and energetic political leader will be adopted by that country as the one of the whom the Almighty gold power has spoken among the world. I think he following will show exactly to every sound thinker the two cases of the great question pending before the American people whether they realized or not.

The gold bugs will be easily convinced with the election of a committee bimetallist, so soon as it is proved beyond doubt that there will be no change in the standard. The world must be overwhelmed continually of gold, which leads to enormous borrowing of money, offering enormous profits to banks, but ever lowering the financial status of American securities and ever encumbering and embarrassing the economical condition of the producing classes. Let America take unknown warning from Spain, Italy and other gold lands.

How different will be the result of the election of an energetic politician who will create at once a national banking institution for the United States, which, as the Bank of England in Britain, the Reichs Bank in Germany and the Banque de France, will, as soon as it is clear to the bank, make a resolution on the part of European governments to take up the silver question, will not hesitate to offset the free coinage of silver hand in hand with the free coinage of gold. European states that have commercial dealings with the United States, and especially those that obtain a greater export trade to the United States, will be compelled, on their part, to stand an international coinage law.

This will not be half a century, and attempts to mock it will prove as futile as have been the efforts of Bismarck to effect a change for the better. The time is ripe, and it is most to accept that the progress of civilization throughout the world depends in reality on the free bimetallism as a sound basis of the intercourse between gold and silver lands through the restoration of the true relative value of the two metals. This great, fundamental truth, recognized by the political economists, sociologists and practical statesmen in all lands of culture, must be taken from the sphere of theoretical speculation and practically applied, should we be spared from revolution and war, which would end in a sure retrogression of civilization.

I hope that it will be the destiny of the powerful commonwealth of the United States and its intelligent, brave and industrious people to take the happy initiative in the great question of modern civilization.

Attend the Primaries.

B. F. Hampton gives the following advice to voters concerning the hour of good government, addressing it to all the people of the State of Utah:

If you want good and honest government, you must select good and honest men and women to make and administer the laws of government; and to successfully accomplish that you must commence at the foundation—the primaries.

Every voter, male and female, throughout the whole State of Utah should meet in their respective precincts a day or two before the primaries are held and select such men and women as you can vote to be the primaries to honestly represent you at the conventions where officers are nominated to be voted for at the coming election.

If you do not do that, others will, and the people will have to endure in the future what they have in the past—incompetent and wasteful administration, and school disintegration.

When the honest are in authority, the people rejoice and which the wicked rule the people mourn.

Respectfully,
B. F. HAMPTON

P.S.—Cut this out and pin it in your hat so you will not forget it, and thereby have to regret it.

BOYS OF THE SIXTEENTH

Will Either Go to Logan, Utah, or Denver, Colo., Next Month—Undress Parade Today.

The troops of the Sixteenth United States Infantry at Fort Douglas were put through an undress drill and parade this forenoon before the commanding general of the department of Colorado, Brigadier General Frank W. Wilson, brevet major in the United States army. It is apparent from preparations that the Sixteenth contingent will take one of the most thorough and efficient encampments in the entire Western department, but in the United States army. This much can be said without danger of transgressing in any degree upon the details of a good joke.

There has been under consideration for some time the making of arrangements for the Sixteenth to take up a practice march of one hundred miles, by detachments about October 1st. The plan contemplates that they shall march to Logan, Utah, pitch their tents and remain in camp for one week, the distance from Salt Lake City to Logan being about fifteen miles a day, will be covered and so the return from sojourn in Cache valley.

Only the last two or three days, however—since the arrival of General Wilson—a trip to Denver during the fall festival has been thought of by some. Actual time the distance between here and Denver would be traversed by rail, while that from Ogden to Denver, one hundred and ninety miles, would be taken by march. It will be known definitely by September 15 whether or not the two trips will be entered.

ON A PRACTICE MARCH,

Fifth National Guard Battery Under Captain Goode to Go to Farmington.

Under an authorization from the adjutant generals office today the First Battery, to command of Captain Goode of this city, will make a three days' practice march to Farmington where they will pitch their tents and engage in artillery and drilling gun work. The battery will return on Monday evening. The boys expect to have a good time of it on their march.

TO SELECT A TARGET RANGE.

Special Order Issued to That Effect from the Adjutant General's Office.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL GUARD OF UTAH,
Salt Lake City, Sept. 9, 1896.

General Order No. 26.

A board of officers will assemble without delay for the purpose of selecting a target range for small arms practice. They will especially consider these objects:

First—Obtaining the consent of the owners or owners of the land for the purpose named.

Second—The security of the people and property of the neighborhood.

Third—The means of attending safety in the markers and others at the target.

Fourth—The accessibility with the least expense of the participants to the grounds.

Fifth—The suitability of the area for target practice.

Sixth—If practicable one range should be selected for the joint use of all organizations, and with this end in view a place where two or more targets can be placed should be sought.

As several officers of the guard have already given this matter their attention, they should assist the board with any information thereby obtained. The general inspector of target practice will be consulted with by the board. As the target season is well advanced, the board will render their report at the earliest practicable moment.

Detail of the board: Colonel Henry Pace, First infantry; Captain J. G. Nystrom, First infantry; second Lieutenant John A. Ford, First cavalry.

By order of the commander-in-chief.
JOS. G. CANNON,
Adjutant General.
