THE COUNTRY NEWSPAPER.

Generous Recognition Thereof by a Great Metropolitan Thought-Exciter.

[Brooklyn Eagle.]

An independent man is the country editor. Undoubtedly those in the making and moulding of American thought are the country newspapers. In the big cities, the dailies draw the bulk of attention as the moon draws the tides of the sea. In the smaller cities which are near to the larger, some local journalism, instead of wholly making itself humanity, if not exclusively local and thereby retaining and increasing a home constituency, are too often too apt to try to imitate the metropolitan dailies, with the results that are not either heretofore or influential. Such papers as the Portland Republican, the Troy Times, The Troy Press, one or two more in Albany, the Observer and the Press of Utica and about all the dailies in Rochester avoid this error, to the profit of their constituents and to the gratification of their contemporaries. But our commendation of the country editor and of the country newspaper was not meant to apply to them.

It was meant to apply to the better class of rural weeklies. There is one published at Geneva by the state editor, Mr. Parker. It is both a luxury and a necessity to its constituency, which is a very enlightened one. There are several such papers in the county of Mr. Lewis—a county of which the dominant intelligence seems to be absolutely incompatible with the Tammany politics. The Catskill Mail, for a paper to be mentioned in another such paper in the beautiful county of Otsego, published in the picturesque village of Cooperstown, appreciative editor Fenimore Cooper's descendant, very faithfully and ably edited by S. H. Shaw, one of the most modest, straight, efficient and worthily loved men in the journalism of the Empire state.

The Freeman's Journal, on the 4th of August, 1898, began its ninety-first volume. Just think how old a paper that is! It survey all its life, it has been upright, honest and branched word and household counsel in the charming garden spot of Northern Central New York, as proven with its good, remunerative and history, and as notable for the valor of its sons, the beauty of its daughters, the fertility of its soil, the fecundity of its families and the faith of its worshipers. The best years of the life of this paper have been those in which Mr. Shaw has been its editor.

All the editors of all parties, and the majority of editors, known as independent editors are honored by regarding him as their friend. They are glad to hear of his prosperity. They are delighted to note the unimpaired virility and variety of his thought. They are inspired by his earnestness for principle and by his unique capacity to express his moral and political convictions in a way to disarm opponents, to strengthen supporters and to diffuse good cheer in the midst of excitement and discomfort among men.

He has no more love than the Eagle's eye is to him, and the Eagle's thought is very much to him, at this time, that there is of reasoning for conclusions or of neglects of his journalistic trust, and either of sometime would be incredible. We have, in past years, taken occasion of the felicitous arrival of the paper under his charge at an interesting point in its history, to express gratitude him upon his ability, upon the table land of time whereon he stands, to contemplate the past with philosophy, the present with serenity and the future with confidence.

Is the War Over?

Before the protocol was submitted, Mr. McKinley had only to demand the whole Philippine archipelago as the same preliminary terms with which he called for the surrender of the Spanish Antilles, and both countries would have been made. In the face of England's friendly attitude towards the United States, no outside power would have protested, and Spain could have been easily coerced, either by the threat of exacting a large money indemnity or by the dispatch of Watson's squadron to the Canaries and the Mediterranean. As it is, the Spaniards have deliberately delegated the disposition of the Philippines to a joint commission, in which he has given, thus far, only two of the greatest care to have in other plenipotentiaries who can be trusted to carry out the wishes of their sovereign, and it is to be hoped that we can hope for is an equal division of the commission on the question whether we shall be permitted to retain the Philippines or even the Island of Luzon. Should, moreover, the negotiations result, after months of delay and enormous expenditure, in a decision that we shall be left in an unfortunate moral position before the bar of the Republican opinion. Why, it will be asked, if you intended to annex all of the Philippines, or at least for the island of Luzon, did you not announce your determination beforehand, as you did in the case of the Spanish Antilles, and make your demand a part of the ultimatum offered in your protocol? What was the use of keeping your squadron, and forcing Spain to keep herself, on a war footing during many months of negotiations which, it might have been foreseen, would be fruitless? How could the President justify in the eyes of foreign powers the extra financial burden so unnecessarily imposed on Spain, and how could he justify in the eyes of American citizens the additional financial burden equitably imposed on ourselves, provided the joint commission should, after months of fruitless discussion, result in a deadlock? It is manifest that the administration, when it dispatched its fleet to the seas of the present, had not yet made up its mind concerning the Philippines, and having yet had time to ascertain the judgment of the country in the matter. At present the judgment of the country is distinctly known, and, before it was known, it was have been declared with irresistible emphasis. The practical question, therefore, for the administration, is whether it can safely dare, with the fear of a remedy in omission to make between a peremptory demand for all the Philippines or, at least, for the island of Luzon. To answer that question, it has but to recall the course pursued by the Polk administration in 1846. Before the end of 1847, the Polk administration had become the unchallenged master of the Mexican republic, and might have annexed the whole of its territory if it desired. It desired, however, to conciliate the Whig members of the Senate, and therefore, refrained from seizing any more of Mexico than was acquired from Mexico the region now forming California, Nevada, Arizona, Utah and New Mexico, not by conquest, but by purchase, giving therefor the sum of $15,000,000, an amount derisively, indeed, compared with the subsequently discovered value of the acquisition, but, nevertheless, most welcome at the time to the Mexican central government, in its straitened condition. Even then, the treaty of peace barely obtained ratification in the Senate, and three more senators were needed to the treaty would have been rejected. Spain is suffering from the same financial embarrassment which then embarrassed Mexico, and would gladly sell to us those islands in the far East which the President has refrained from exercising a determination to keep. But why, it may be asked, should we buy what we could have had for nothing? That is a question for our state department to answer, from the moment that the protocol was signed, it became practically impossible to get the Philippines for nothing. If we want them, we either shall have to fight for them through a renewal of war, or shall have to secure them by purchase. Meanwhile, no man who has a thorough understanding of the situation created by the protocol will take for granted that the war is over, until a definitive treaty of peace has been signed and ratified.—Collier's Weekly.

LITERARY NOTES.

Reminiscences of the war are the basis of a great part of the text and illustrations of the new number of Collier's Weekly. The frontispiece picture, "Over the Top," by Wenzell, shows the old bronze color bearer Hilton, who was with the army throughout the Rebellion, carrying the colors in a full-page drawing of a Cuban family standing reverently at the grave of an American soldier, on a lone sketches of Mr. Bonsall. Louis Mora has made a large, impressive picture of The House of Yellow Fever, which occupies 4 pages. On the same page are some photographic views of Camp Wikoff, Long Island, to which General Shafter's army has been sent for rest and convalescence. Prize Essays on Exercise Exercises shows Cuba then in the act of drilling for a concert upon savage-minded American citizens in Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Ladrones and the Philippines. Annie's serial progresses amazingly. There is much correspondence from the Army, Navy and Camp, and a timely article on "Food in the War Court."

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for September presents many timely features. The various events connected with the end of the war with Spain are discussed by the editor, and the Peace Treaty campaign, from start to finish, described by John A. Church, formerly of the Army and Navy Journal, now of the Times of Manila and the Home, and previously for meeting, it are opened up by Charles A. Conant, Henry Mathews, Hon. Washington Gladden, and others, and a character sketch of William R. Day, the secretary of state, which is of special interest at this time because of Judge Day's appointment as leading member of the American peace commission. Charles Lowe, the English biographer of Bismarck, and W. T. Stead furnish a rich hoard of anecdotes regarding the late ex-chancellor. Aside from many other illustrations, numerous cartoons appear of the war are included from home and foreign journals.

The handsome external appearance of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for September is borne out by an attractive table of contents. The leading article, "A Working Battery," by Harry Harrison Lewis, tells how the great guns are placed and worked. The famous Johnson Island Confederate prison, outside of the Civil War, related to the recent death of Leonard B. Johnson of Sandusky, Ohio, is reviewed by Frederick Boyd Stevenson, and a number of interesting as well as picturesque valor is John P. Hoyt's story of Wyoming the Beautiful. The serials continue Mr. Ralph Connor's story of Colonial America, Jim Saxon, are discussed, with some original sketches, by Mr. Frank J. M. Ryan. Frederick Upham Adams, Mr. H. Wood, is full of romantic suggestions. Richard Tyrrel contributes some notes upon The Irish Theatre, illustrated with original photographs of characteristic pictures by Hennick. The tenth and final paper of the Famous Impersonations by the Rev. A. P. Doyle, The complete short tales in this month's Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly include Mowly's Revenge, Pecan, Meade Conway's Brother, Which Won Cuba? by Demetrius L. Brown, and As a Last Resort, by J. Frederick Thorne.

The complete novel in the September issue of Lippincott's is "The Touch of a Vanished Hand," by the late Miss M. G. McClelland. Its action occurs mainly in Virginia, and partly in our own New York during the French and Indian war of 1755.

"The Crowned Case," by James Raymond Perry, deals with the unusual ending of a supposed murder. Henry Hunnell Bennett, in "A Charge in the Dark," describes an experience of the National Guard which resembled actual war. The "Harvesting" of Anna Vernon Dorsey's tale was a colored boy, on whom cares and labors too heavy for his years were laid.

Felix L. Oswald, in "Wills of "War Injuries" (the superstitions and injuries that attend hostilities, and Frances M. Butler of "War Songs," including Kipling's famous "Recessional" and "Hymn and Reprisal" are considered by Professor M. Hunt with special reference to our relations with England.

"New York" in the September issue is a previously unpublished chapter from M. E. W. Sherwood's recollections. "The Three Dukes" whom memory is revived by Frank Norman, and Brummell, Nash and Fordham, "Elizabeth" by Mary Jacobs author of "The Time of Beginning," with harvest festivals and the like in various lands and ages.

Among the noteworthy features of "As You Like It" are the subject of a careful study, by E. S. Lorrison, "The Chronicles of an Unsuccessful Author" contains the humorist's record as experience for that century.

The poetry of the number is by Mary E. Stickney, Charles G. D. Roberts and Edward Gilliam.

In McClure's Magazine for September, Mr. George F. Gibbons describes the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet, as he himself had the good fortune to see the work done from Commodore Schley's flagship, the Brooklyn, and Mr. W. A. M. Goode describes it as he saw it from Admiral Sampson's flagship, the New York. Together the two papers give a complete account of what was undoubtedly the most picturesque event of all the war.

Some interesting reminiscences and letters of Mary Todd Lincoln, the wife of President Lincoln, are given in an article by her sister, Emile Todd Helm. The Indian chief Two Moons's story of Gen. Custer's last fight, as taken down by Mr. Hamlin Garland, is the latest version of a famous battle between him and the white man. An exposition, by Mr. George B. Waldron, of "The Commercial Possibilities of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines," presents the possibilities of our recent conquests. Other features of the number are a timely article on Alaska, with some facts regarding the action of volcanoes, by Cleveland Moffett, and an account of "How the News of the War is Reported," by Ray Stannard Baker.
