Editor Deseret News:

We the undersigned dance committee of the Paris First ward, wish to state that at a dance given in the Paris First ward by Hoops, Budge and Patten, a report of which was published in the Paris Post of December 21, 1894, and copied into the Logan Journal and DESERET NEWS, to the effect that said dance "was the noblest given for many a long day, that there was no much liquor to make the dance enjoyable," is justice to the people of Paris and to Messrs. Budge and Patten, we wish the public to understand that the Post of its information was mistaken, whether wilfully or not we cannot say; unfortunately there was a disturbance among a few boys outside, but this we do know, that the dance was quiet and orderly, that there was no person or persons within our building under the influence of liquor, that the dance was conducted by us, and according to the rules of the local authorities of our ward.

By publishing the above you will oblige a great favor on

Yours very truly,

The Holiday Number.

The holiday number of the valuable home paper, the Woman's Exponent, contains very interesting reading matter. An excellent Christmas story, entitled His Church Mother—Christmas in an English Village, is interesting well from the pen of a gifted and caughty writer, Annie Kimball Metcalfe. The editorials are timely, and in fact the whole number is of good and instructive character. The illustrations are numerous and well executed, and the whole is presented in a form calculated to be pleasing and favorably received by the public.

The 400.

The number entertained at the Tenth ward annual re-union this year reached the 400 mark—an increase of about eighty-four over last year. In accordance with a custom established in that ward years ago some few days since committees were appointed to arrange for the re-union, and judging from yesterday's entertainment, their efforts were amply repaid with success.

The program of the day commenced at three o'clock when 400 people, consisting of the attendants, partook of a sumptuous repast, consisting of all the good things supplied in this market. While the guests were seated, before commencing, a flashlight picture of the scene was taken by Chas. W. Symons, photographer. After the tables, etc., had been removed an interesting program, consisting of speeches, songs and recitations, was duly rendered, some of the speeches being exceedingly fine. This was followed by dancing, which continued till late night, with the company supplied with food and refreshments, and looking forward with pleasure anticipations to the same event next year.

The decorating committee deserve praise for the handsome display of multicolored decorations and appropriate mottoes.

The Sunday school children to the number of about 450 are enjoying themselves this afternoon being treated to a dance, and feasted on the good things that help to make child's life happy.

RATHER MIXED UP.

[illegible] counted the ballots and he looked on. He himself says he tally.

Henry Jones, a judge of election at Mayfield, testified that the poll book and poll list corresponded—seventy-one on each. There were lots of written tickets. After the election the presiding judge took the ballot boxes to witness house. One of them—the constitutional—was not there when found at office, but witness could not say it was in office.

In answer to Mr. Williams, witness said the reason he did not look the box over because the key was broken. Asked why the ballot boxes were not taken to the house of the presiding judge, witness said because he lived two miles distant from Mayfield. He was confident that the ballot boxes were not tampered with in any way while they remained in his possession, before being expressed.

Reed G. Nelson, recalled by Mr. Zane, testified that the poll lists as they now appeared showed marked the names of six persons who did not vote the Constitutional ticket at the late election.

Mr. Williams asked the witness how he knew that these six men did not vote.

"I was there," answered Nelson, "and I know from memory they were not registered.

"Were you there all the time?"

"I was, with the exception of fifteen minutes, until midnight." Witness said it was about 7:30 when first he was absent, when he went away to get lunch. Questioned as to whether he could remember every man who went up to vote that day and all that was said, witness declared that he could.

"Are you a registration officer?" queried Mr. Williams.

"No," answered the witness, "but I have checked the list as good as I could tell the name of every man on it."

"Were you a candidate for the Republican party during the campaign?"

"Yes, sir, I was general roustabout." (Laughter.)

James H. Hansen, presiding judge at Eightmile, in answer to Mr. Zane, expressed the opinion that the poll book and poll list corresponded. He said he took charge of the ballot boxes after the election. They were locked and sealed and were kept at his house until they were deposited in Salt Lake City. At the time they were sealed.

Joseph Jorgensen, of Ephraim, one of the judges of election at that place, said the poll books and poll lists compared exactly where the pol closed.

Mr. Zane—The poll book of Ephraim, as it now stands, shows 329 votes marked Tom, and the poll list 325. Have you examined them?

"I have examined the poll book now."

"Do you see any two marked tickets that did not vote the Constitutional ticket at the election?"

"Yes, sir." The witness gave name of three names.

In the afternoon the examination of witnesses was resumed. Oscar Crane, who testified yesterday was recalled and in reply to Attorney Zane, said that he was judge of election at Lewis Pleasant and had marked the poll book as each man voted. One party named Scott was marked "voted" but he really did not vote the Constitutional ticket. Witness thought the name was not in.

Nels Thompson, judge of election at Ephraim, testified that five men were marked voted who didn't vote. The writing in the poll book opposite their names was not that of witness or any one else at the polls.

Lars Nielsen said the poll books and the poll lists at Fairbanks Grove corresponded.

William P. Cook, presiding judge of election at Fairbanks Grove, said that Green A. Dowdle had not voted the Constitutional ticket, but he was marked as having done so. Witness mailed the poll books, poll lists and tally sheets to the Utah Commission the morning after the election. The ballot boxes he kept till November 24 at his house, where they were called in by the Commission.

THE GAME.

Review of Yesterday's Contest on the Gridiron.

The game yesterday afternoon between the Chicago University and the Y. M. C. A. team proved to be an exceedingly one-sided affair—32 to 0 in favor of the visitors.

There are no excuses to offer. It was simply a case of Western versus more practice players. Every movement of the attacking team was an eye-opener to the spectators. Chicago and the ball the business of the afternoon's play; still Chicago would go for interference based on the almighty Wyatt, whose memories were ever sympathetic in the rear. "Old Glass," as he was irreverently called by the assailants, was a corker, and every rush round from three to ten yards gained. Heading had the Athletic hope for the home team, who threw themselves upon the attacking force with an energy born of despair, but nothing seemed to stop the inevitable. As soon as the interference was broken round the ball line would appear and the ball come out of the mêlée. Taylor did some splendid work, his laying embrace would really steal around the angle force of Nichols, Allen & Co., and a huge cheer would greet that another earthly had hit the dust in rather fast. Peabody also did some fine passing and a few times relieving the pressure at critical moments. In fact all the Salt Lake boys played their best; there was no shirking, every man was in his place, and would sort himself out of his place, jump to his position and go down before the well organized human machine once with a do-or-die fire upon earnest-freezed countenance that was startling.

The whole game was just one prolonged block. Bonine and Tucker were nice to get round the ends, but down up the line on a solid play, relinquishing the ensuing Chicago's play calling the back line out for quite what might be expected from a team of their reputation, but ball being injured so far that eight times in a row each member, while Coy's kicking a necklace was equally successful, given a touch of Chicago reputation and experience to deliver his time and attention to the subject from, not many months would pass before Salt Lake would have as good an eleven as most colleges of her size. Old as Mazeppa Clegg himself remarked, "There is first material, but very raw—more conscientious work and less individualism are the first principles of a good eleven."

Captain Cross although badly injured the game of yesterday was in the master of his team. Throughout it was very adjective thought Hughes monopolized newer the Rules. There was also a marked absence of unnecessary roughness or unnecessary wrangling.

Tax Sale Decision.

In the Fourth district court Judge Smith gave a decision in the case of the Lindsborg National Bank vs. Ogden City. His honor held that where property upon which taxes were due, was county and city, one and the same and yet in by the county, the officers could only collect one tax, a certificate issued by the county and then the city also. If he has the county to make out a certificate to the county and also a certificate of sale to the city, making double sale. The judge's decision is that the certificate of sale given to the city is void, the county holding the city's share of the taxes in trust.

PROVO.

PROVO, UTAH, JAN. 5, 1895.

A Serious Accident.

Yesterday afternoon Alma Jennings and Mr. Davis continued to go early hunting, and went to the residence of John Davis to get a gun and a horse and buggy. The horse was the one passed behind the side of the car and Mr. Davis began to harness the horse. He heard the report of a gun, and when he raised around he saw Mr. Jennings with the arm torn and the blood streaming from a wound in his left wrist. Mr. Davis's report is to the effect around the wounded arm and they set out for Dr. McCornick's office where it was found that a charge of duck shot had passed through the wrist inflicting so serious a wound that amputation of the hand was necessary. Mr. Jennings declares that he does not know how the gun went off, and the only theory is that he accidentally touched it and it was discharged in falling. The gun was a remington Marlin gun and a light hit is said to be sufficient to discharge it, if left in a position ready to be fired.
