NUMBER ONE.

SOME OF THE PRINCIPLES ON WHICH BUSINESS MUST BE CONDUCTED TO MAKE IT SUCCESSFUL.

Our article on the "egoistic and altruistic theories" has drawn out a number of communications from our readers, showing the hold which the discussion has taken of the public mind. One of these writers claims to have been startled by our announcement that Christianity and sound political economy alike require every man to love his neighbor as himself, and he asks how this is possible in ordinary commercial intercourse. He insists that he consults his own interests alone in every bargain, and that a man who does not look after "number one" will soon go to the wall.

To this we reply that every man's own interest, and a due regard for the initial number indicated, require an equal consideration for the interest of others. If the only concern of a boot-maker is to obtain ten dollars for a pair of boots, and he has no consideration for the interest of the buyer, he will soon lose his custom. He must see to it that if he asks ten dollars for his work he gives the customer ten dollars' worth of boots. There is no antagonism of interest, but a mutual profit. The best workmen are evermore looking out for customers who will appreciate their skill and faithfulness, and every honest customer is in quest of a workman who will give him the value for his money. The buyer who is seeking to cheat the maker by employing him at a price too low, and the maker who is seeking to obtain his price without giving the buyer a good article as an honest equivalent for the money, are each acting on the "egoistic" theory, but not in a true self-interest.

This is the great mistake made by those who through artificial means endeavor to circumvent the laws of trade, and secure for their calling an undue relative price. The journeyman who makes the ten-dollar boots insists that seven dollars is not enough for his labor, and strikes for nine dollars or refuses to work. If his employer gives nine and continues to sell for ten he is ruined, and the workman loses his place. If the employer raises his price to twelve dollars the extra cost diminishes the demand. The old boots are worn longer, shoes are substituted, some go with bare feet, and in various ways the sale is diminished. In addition, the extra cost of boots, increasing the annual expenses of all who wear them, augments the cost of everything the journeyman has to buy, so that his selfish effort has resulted to his absolute disadvantage. It is for the interest of all who have anything to do with production to give the consumer his fair equivalent in a good article at a reasonable price. Any other course, however sagacious it may appear, is really injurious to its "egoistic" author.

There are many who admit this principle in the direct interchange of this class of services. They can see far enough to recognize the fact that the doctor for his patient, the lawyer for his client, the artisan for his customer, must act on the principles we have stated, and best consults his own interest when he works for the interest of his patron. But they are often blind to the evidence, abundantly offered to one of quick discernment, that the same law holds true in the mere distribution of products.

An old merchant of this city once told us that he thought more tradesmen failed through a lack of interest in their customers' welfare than for want of devotion to what they selfishly considered their own advantage. This merchant was noted when in the retail trade for his candor in advising his customers against any purchase which he thought would not give them permanent satisfaction. He would always forego a sale if he believed the article under examination was not the one which the buyer really required. When he left the retail trade, and engaged in a large wholesale business, he continued to practice upon the same principle. He did it conscientiously as a matter of duty; but he always insisted that it was the true mercantile policy. His customers could pay him because they were enabled to sell everything they bought of him at a profit. They liked to trade with him because he sought their interest, advised them what to purchase, and would not, to clear out his own stock, transfer to their shelves any article he did not believe they could turn to advantage. He would often take back to his own present loss, some fabric which proved unsaleable. He called such dead stock "shopkeepers," and he often declared that he would rather dig a hole in the ground and bury them than to have them lie year after year on the shelves of his patrons, a continual reminder that they had made a bad bargain in the purchase.

This may sound strangely to some of the fast young merchants of our day, but it is the true theory of business. The distinguished writer we quoted in our last article may sneer at this as an "altruistic" method, ruinous to enterprise, because it seems more outgoing than self-seeking; but we can assure him and all others who will listen, that He who wrote for every subject the grand requirement, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," has with the same hand established the irrepealable laws of trade, and a breach of one is a violation of the other. He who seeks his own interest in a loving regard for the well-being of others will find the rule of Christian ethics profitable for the life that now is, as well as for that which is to come.—New York Journal of Commerce.

It is Better.

Better to wear a calico dress without trimming, if it be paid for, than to owe the shopkeeper for the most elegant silk, cut and trimmed in the most bewitching manner.

Better to live in a log cabin all your own than a brown stone mansion belonging to somebody else.

Better walk forever than run into debt for a horse and carriage.

Better to sit by the plain pine table, for which you paid three dollars ten years ago, than send home a new extension black walnut top, and promise to pay for it next week.

Better to use the old cane-seated chairs, and faded two-ply carpet, than tremble at the bills sent home from the upholsterers for the most elegant parlor set ever made.

Better to meet your business acquaintances with a free, "don't you owe a cent" smile, than to dodge around the corner to escape a dun.

Better to pay the street organ-grinder two cents for music, if you must have it, than to owe for a grand piano.

Better to gaze upon bare walls than pictures unpaid for.

Better to eat thin soup from earthenware, if you owe your butcher nothing, than to dine off lamb and roast beef, and know that it does not belong to you.

Better let your wife have a fit of hysterics than to run in debt for nice new furniture, or clothes, or jewelry, or any other thing that women wish for. A fit of hysterics, properly managed, is often of more real benefit to a woman than anything you could buy. It is better to treat them in this way: "When she begins to cry for something she ought to know she cannot have, try to reason with her a little."

The total number of deaths in New York last year was 32,047, an increase of 5,671 on the mortality of 1871.

The Boston Advertiser intimates that it might not be inappropriate to change the name of the Massachusetts Agricultural College to "a school to wean farmers' sons from farm work."
