The Louisiana Affair.

Nothing that has happened in this country since the rebels fired upon Fort Sumter is better calculated to create consternation than the rash act of General De Trobriand in New Orleans on Monday. The New York papers that have the courage to speak out on the subject all denounce it as a great outrage, and not even the Times, which has for years been a close supporter of the administration, dares to approve it. The only authority conferred on the President for interference in matters of this sort is derived from the fourth section of the fourth article of the constitution. It reads: "The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on the application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), against domestic violence." In this case the State of Louisiana has not been treated according to the requirements of this section. There can be no question that the form of government of Louisiana is republican, was such a minute before General De Trobriand broke up the legislature by an armed force. There can hardly be any question that it was not republican in form after this act. There could be no authority for the interference. It was the prerogative of the Legislature to call for interference when in session, and it was in session by a quorum of its members when it was broken into and driven out of doors—in all respects as Cromwell used the Parliament of England, and Napoleon the Council of Five Hundred. The body was orderly and progressing with its business. The organization may not have been and we shall assume was not perfectly regular, but many a State Legislature has been organized with greater irregularity and without suggesting a thought of military interference. If every such occasion were to introduce bayonets into the House or Senate, we should be a republic like that of Rome under Sulla, Marius or Cæsar—a republic in name only; in fact a military despotism, everywhere inspiring hate and challenging popular resistance. The madness of the act is intensified by the fact that Congress is now in session and is conducting an investigation of the Louisiana government.

We are not disposed to put the responsibility of this act upon the General who executed it with bad grace, nor upon the Secretary of War, nor upon the President. We incline to the opinion that it will be traced to the man who heads the Department of Justice, only to the shame and disgrace of justice. He has been giving orders to the military of late with a liberal hand and indecent interference with the duties of the Secretary of War. He has of late given out the opinion that the Kellogg government should be maintained at all hazards. It was he, who inspired the fraudulent interference of Judge Durell, which has been the source of all the political evils that have since ensued to Louisiana; and we think the ultimate responsibility for the order to General De Trobriand will be traced to the hand and brain of Attorney General Williams, head of the Department of Justice, and the supporter of some of the most infamous public plunderers who go unhung.

If this act is to receive recognition as public law, and a precedent for the future regulation of the relations between the Federal Government and the State governments, then we may anticipate with much confidence the nearness of the years when the sovereign States will be treated as utterly dependent provinces—dependent, too, not upon the will of Congress, but the whim of the man who may happen to be President, and at the time under the influence of some Sejanus at the head of a department. The country can only afford to submit to such a rule of law and such a precedent after it shall have concluded that liberty and the republic ought to make room for imperial despotism. We know this is grave language, but the subject is grave enough to justify it. The sufferings of the State of Louisiana never can weigh in the scales with the calamities such an action as this, if not resented by all the force of law and the Constitution, is certain to entail upon the whole people of the U. S. And if Congress fails to investigate and to severely punish the author of the order to De Trobriand, it will not escape the severest execrations of history. No matter how high the head is located—the higher the worse for the country—it should be made to fall politically. And this is as sure to be the popular verdict as the people of this country surely have the strongest attachment to the principle that the civil is superior to the military power—the law and the Constitution to the men charged with their administration. The conduct of Charles in seizing the persons of Eliot, Hampden, Pym and Sydney; the conduct of Cromwell in breaking up a Parliament; the conduct of Napoleon in dissolving the Council of Five Hundred by military force, was less reprehensible than this latest act of military interference. For all these preceding usurpers there was at least the plausible excuse that what they did was not positively inhibited by law; that the law was involved in doubt; that the country had no established confidence in the system of government overthrown. But not one of these excuses can be summoned in palliation of the New Orleans outrage. The military interference in this case is without a shadow of justice, right, or popular approval on its side.—Sacramento Union, Jan. 6.

TESTIMONIAL.
Editor Deseret News:
I had a son who appeared to be in ill health, being in a pining condition. I was unable to determine the nature of the disease which afflicted him. A few days since I placed him under the treatment of Dr. Plant, who, within a few hours, and without pain or inconvenience to the lad, freed the patient of a tapeworm about forty feet long, since which time the boy has been improving. I wish you to publish this circumstance, as much for the benefit of people afflicted similarly to my boy, as to award credit to Dr. Plant, whose skill in that line of complaints can be relied on, besides his charges are moderate.
