GEORGE Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH,
First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

CONSTITUTION AND SCHOOLS AGAIN

The NEWS has published two letters from Mr. Moffat, of South Cottonwood, on the subject of the Constitution and the public school system, and has made reply to inquiries to each. Now the gentleman comes with a statement of his view of the situation, in which he figures out that dire consequences will follow to the public school system under section 6, article 10, of the Constitution, which provides that the schools in cities of the first and second class shall be maintained and controlled separate and apart from the counties in which said cities are located. Upon this point a brief review of the real status will show, we think, that our correspondent is wholly mistaken in his fear of disaster, as also in his assumption of what the proposed supreme law of the State provides.

Before proceeding with the proposition of tax levies as the gentleman presents it, reference may be made to his expressed fear that wealthy school districts will "bear such force upon county selectmen that they will refuse to levy a county school tax." If there were any inducement to lead city school districts to invoke such influence, it exists in the present method whereby, as he puts it, $15,000 of Salt Lake City taxpayers' money goes to the support of the county schools. If the city taxpayers were as illiteral as his suggestion imports, the present is the very system to induce them to act in that line. The fact that they do not so act should be conclusive evidence of an intention not to do so, and in that respect city taxpayers are less illiteral than some who clamor against them.

Upon the other proposition, examination of our correspondent's statement regarding the levy of taxes shows misapprehension on his part as to Constitutional provisions. He names: 1—Two mills for "current expenses of the Territory (State);" 2—Three mills for "a State school fund;" 3—Three mills for current county expenses; 4—Two mills for a "county school fund to be divided in the county precisely as the State fund." Now these are not in the Constitution at all, but by that document are continued in force as statutory regulations, subject to the will of the Legislature. What he calls a "State school fund" is not such fund under the Constitution, but merely an incident subject to legislative manipulation for adding to the State school fund, which is described in section 3 of article 10, and is made up of school land proceeds, money from the sale of timber, minerals, etc.—itself a very large resource. As the statutory regulations, including the fourth enumeration made, are continued by the Constitution, then, if the whole question lies in handling the county school fund, as stated by our correspondent, his entire contention is swept away, and the matter is left just where it is under Territorial rules—subject to the will of the Legislature.

Regarding the supposition that the separate control named in section 6 of article 10 is "an entering wedge which means the destruction of the whole free school system," the fallacy of the proposition is shown in the same article of the Constitution, which says "the Legislature shall provide for the establishment and maintenance" of such system, and that "the common school shall be free."

Even if the extreme position were taken that the "county school fund," which has been named as of such importance, but which really is no figure in the case, being subject entirely to the Legislature and not provided for in the Constitution, were done away with altogether, what is the effect under the State Constitution? Plainly this: That by the State school taxes the city school districts, other and all, help the poor ones; the rich counties aid the poor ones. If Salt Lake City has the property which pays the taxes, then those taxes go to aid not only Salt Lake county schools, but the schools of every poor district in the State. That is the undeniable fact in the case, under the State Constitution. The public school system is not a system by counties at all, but by the State, and supported by the whole State, under legislative provisions not inconsistent with the Constitution, which distributes the school fund according to school population, and requires a uniform and equal rate of taxation throughout the State.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF WOMEN.

A curious religious sect is said to exist in Texas. Attention has been called to it by the visit of three of its members to New York recently. The name of the sect is "Disciples of Christ," or "Shouting Christians." As the term implies, it consists of women only. The founder is Mrs. Martha McWhirter and the fundamental principles of their religion are celibacy, common property and an isolated existence.

An instance of what can be accomplished by co-operation the financial success of the little community in Texas is remarkable. Nineteen years ago the society was formed. One of the first efforts made was to render it self-supporting. For this purpose each member employed a method of her own. One woman, who had previously lived in a cottage, bought wood as it stood in the forest, and with the aid of another sister cut the timber and hauled the foot to market. Others accepted positions as domestics in households in adjoining towns, their earnings being pooled for mutual benefit. Others sold country produce, and a few took in laundry work to add a mite to the assets.

The community now consists of thirty-two members, all of whom live at the Central hotel, in Bolton. This building is their own property. The Central Hotel company is a corporation well and favorably known in financial circles, and represents the united interests of the colonists. The estimated wealth of the sect is $100,000. The hotel building and furnishings cost $50,000. The rest of the capital is distributed in small enterprises.

The labor necessary for the existence of the association is divided among its members. One of them will teach the children. One of the sisters is an expert dentist, and has an office fully equipped for working at her profession. The income from the hotel is the principal source of revenue, but every investment seems to have been a profitable one, rendering the organization self-supporting and entirely independent. They are leaders in making public improvements, and all are among the most active and progressive citizens, always ready to advance the interests of the town. Mrs. McWhirter is a member of the board of trade and a director of the Opera House syndicate of Bolton.

There is no formal worship of any kind practiced by the sisters, says the report from which these facts are taken, but daily devotional exercises are part of their creed, and they are also largely guided by "dreams." A record of religious experiences by members forms a basis for all their important actions. They also claim to be possessed of a delicate sense, which is their greatest help, and by it they detect mistakes made, and through it correct them.

They try to improve themselves intellectually, and are regular subscribers to the leading papers of the great cities. In their library are all the standard works, but the works of Tolstoi, Bellamy and other authors of that class are most liked.

IS FRANCE PREPARED FOR WAR?

The persistent rumors of impending war in Europe are again revived, this time in dispatches from Paris. Next spring, it is thought, will witness the assembling of French armies on the same plains where, a few days ago, the magnificent maneuvers took place, but then engaged in operations against a real, not a sham foe.

The fate of Europe lies at present, it is claimed, entirely in the hands of the young czar. General Dragomiroff was sent as a special military representative of Russia to witness the French maneuvers. The soldiers were, of course, presented to him at their best and everything was done to create a favorable impression. The result is that the Russian general is prepared to return to his imperial master with the report that France is ready for the fray, and that the word may be given at any moment. And when it comes, the attack, it is supposed, will be directed against Germany.

War predictions in Europe have been so often made, that they almost fail to create any interest. Still, everybody feels that some time the storm must break loose in all its violence. If the czar, however, or his advisers look deeper than on the surface of things, they will feel convinced that France, with all her military display, is not much better able to cope with Germany today than she was a quarter of a century ago, when the enthusiastic warmy rose from the depths of the nation and lured her on to humiliation. Military force is not all that is needed for success in a contest where the opponent is equally well equipped. Stronger than a well armed host is the moral character of a people rising to defense of a just cause. In this respect France has not advanced much beyond her position during the last Napoleon.

A Paris correspondent writing on the subject states that France is receiving shocking proofs of the moral degeneracy and morbid passions that rule a large proportion of her people. An epidemic of dreadful murder is passing over the country. Brother is killing brother; case after case is reported where aged peasants have been butchered for the trifles they owned; men are killing their mistresses or are killed by the women they abandon. The other day a woman of good position at Grenoble hired half a dozen wretches to throw vitriol in the face of the wife of her lover. At Roulme a young ecclesiastic easily gave himself up after cutting a little boy to pieces, and explained that he had been impelled to the shocking act by the desire to kill.

Another symptom is a series of suicides of children, apparently for no other reason than that they were tired of life. A harness-maker named Vrignier is now in the shadow of the guillotine accused of several murders of boys and girls. His chief accuser is a young vagabond whom he hired to bring him victims, and who has been blackmailing him for years. This vagabond, who is only a lad, manifests extraordinary cynicism. He fell into the hands of the police in the course of a raid on a resort of tramps, and sought to curry favor with his captors by revealing the fact that Vrignier was the author of an unsolved murder mystery. Since then he has been calmly telling one shocking story after another.

But the corruption of morals is discernible in the highest ranks as well as among the lower strata. The minister of justice is openly accused of using his office to protect various politicians and contractors who are charged with corruption. The fugitive Senator Magnier was his colleague and friend, and it is asserted that M. Trinchon not only permitted but actually caused him to flee to avoid arrest. The theory seems to have been that it is better that one guilty man should escape than that he should be driven by trial and conviction to fall on 100 other guilty men. A public prosecutor has been removed from office, it is alleged, for too great zeal in prosecuting those implicated in the lottery, connected with legislation for the Chemin de fer du Nord.

A people thus infected with the germs of moral disease cannot be counted on to a moral contest for supremacy. It may keep on existing, but its vital force is impaired and the result will be fatal unless a remedy is found.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS of a Pennsylvania district lately nominated for office a man who has been dead six months. But the matter is not as much of a joke as most people think; there is some satisfaction in knowing where you can always find your candidates, and still more in the thought that it is sometimes better to vote for a real corpse than for a living "stiff."

IT is said but true that the man who is most punctual in keeping his appointments is the one who loses the greatest amount of valuable time. He wastes it upon those who are tardy, and they are not usually able to pay for it in any adequate coin.

ANOTHER RAMBLER DAY.

The Rambler boys made a great showing in the Ogden races. The Relayers of the day when the last mile and race, in which McConahay finished third, taking third prize and third time prize. The same the track race, Joe Beck taking second in the mesa, Fowler first, Wheeler second, and Thatcher third in the six scratch, class D, all "Rambler" you will note. In the half mile class A, Joe took second, Carter third. Half mile class B, Thatcher second, Fowler third. Five mile, class B, Fowler second, a thin race a dead lap in a yellow suit and he had and fell, Chandler and Wetter being immediately behind him, the result was a still up. Good racing and the crowd knew it. Three racing and the crowd knew it. The five mile, class A, our summer Rambler event, Hay taking 1st, Joe Beck second and McConahay third. Fourteen prizes in one day is pretty much for any one.
