A PRETTY GIRL.

Nay, but you, who do not love her,
Is she not pure gold, my mother?
—Browning.

There had never been any doubt as to Polly Pinchebeck's popularity. She had been a young queen from babyhood. It had never been of the slightest use trying to keep her under. Her mother made conscientious attempts to not have her in evidence when guests were about, and her father feebly seconded her efforts to cajole her to keep out of Polly's way. The under-talking was nevertheless hopeless. Polly, standing wistfully at the nursery window, made prudent conditions touch Blossom, Polly, as "Cherry Ripe" going to church, was the enchanting thing of the day. When nurse gave first sought glimpses of her whisking her doll carriage or playing with the pup, they were unless for further purposes of entertainment until the fact novelty of intercourse with Polly worn off.

"Her conversation alone is worth the price of admission," condescended a cousin of Polly's, second year at Yale.

When Polly grew, heavily spoiled, of course, petulant, exacting, fairly peremptory, warm, hearted, openly truthful, she was so beautiful that everything was permitted to her. She was clever enough to keep even those whose approbation was worth something deserted to her.

The time naturally came when two out of the crowd of worshipers were distancing all competitors. Polly knew her world and foresaw the inevitable decision she would presently be called upon to make. She intended to marry for love, but was much too clever to be willing to miss that happiness. She was determined to get out of life all that was in it.

"What a comfort it is to be pretty!" she thought, occasionally. "Then really one can fall in love with one. How dreadful to have to choose from impossible creatures!"

One of the men was an artist. He loved Polly's beauty. How and was of the moment. But Polly did not know this. It did not occur to her that any one would dare to separate the two.

The other man loved the inner Polly. He reverenced her beauty, as he did all beauty and truth, and the other things worthy men worship. And Polly did not know the difference between the two men.

There was a tender poetry in the artist's wooing, which was very sweet to her.

He had a way of gently touching her hair and quoting:

Hallowed is night—speak truth—above her!
Above this tree, and this I touch,
But cannot praise, I love so much!

which went to Polly's heart. Yet the constant referring to a strong, serious nature, which the other man unpoetically attributed to her, kept her in a rarer atmosphere than, but for the stimulus of his personality, she could have breathed for long. But this always, when she was more lonely when the other man was with her.

The future the two men offered her were vastly different. The artist drew winning pictures of a beautiful life, of old world life, drifting in Venice, driving through the Wordsworth land, going from German villages to the Boulevard Sins, from the enchantment of Swiss lakes to the Land of the Midnight Sun, and everywhere living a love existence of "love and beauty and delight."

But the other man spoke of a working day world, of a place where men and women and pitiful children needed help and succor. He drew her into the life of the more half of the world and showed her its need. He made her hear the cry of children wanting bread, made her see girls like herself ground into awful misery through it all she felt herself, whose protecting, comforting, helpfulness is so sure and strong.

Meantime the summer was passing. The smiling lessons of early September brought fresh joys. The artist took Polly canoeing, and the other man, who was very boyish and enthusiastic, roused off his feelings in a single scull.

After all, it was a little thing which decided Polly. One afternoon Polly was making tea on the lawn while the rival contestants were playing tennis. She looked unusually beautiful, and when the set was over the artist made several sketches of her. One of these he called "Over the Teacups," in playful love for the dear waiter. He afterward painted it in, and in a few days showed it to Polly.

"I don't like it at all," she objected. "It is the portrait of a beautiful girl."

The artist laughed.

"What does it matter?" he said. "With such lady beauty as yours, you could do anything you liked. No one expects you to be anything but beautiful.

Miss Polly Pinchebeck was not slow. A great many things came back to her as she looked at him for a moment. Then she smiled vaguely.

"But nurse does," she said sweetly. "You can't even going to marry, not you, you know. He thinks me true and good, but it does not matter to you, does it?"

"Is it Fortune?" asked the artist.

"Yes," said Polly, and so she was irrevocably committed. Fortune was coherent remark was that it was better to win her by a Duke than not at all.—Madge Robertson in New York Press.

Fear as a Cause of Disease.

An eminent physician makes the statement that a great deal of contagion is due largely to morbid apprehension and fear. Tissue causes, radical changes in the secretions and tissues, and, while the possibility is not the sized cause of disease it certainly is sufficient to put the person in the proper condition to be attacked to the prevailing malady. It is a well established fact that certain major influence at the expense of the Body. While we drive the brain we must build up the body. Exercise, pure air—foods that make healthy flesh—refreshing sleep—such are methods. When loss of flesh, strength and nerve become apparent your physician will doubtless tell you that the quickest builder of all three is of Cod Liver Oil, which not only creates flesh of and in itself, but stimulates the appetite for other foods.

SUNOL!

ROBERT SONNER
Superintending the shoeing of Sunol with the Putnam Nail.

PORTLAND, OREGON, BRUCE PAYNE, ESQ.
DEAR SIR & BROTHER:
PORTLAND, OREGON, FEB. 10, 1893.
PUTNAM NAIL CO., Newport, Mass.
GENTLEMEN: Enclosed find Check for the 500 nail, with which time I have used the Putnam Nail and Shoes, but it has come to the point with me that wherever I will not shoe any other nail to be used than the Putnam nail. Forged Nail if I can procure it. Willing there may be others as good, I know what those are, and am afraid to make experiments.
Very respectfully yours,
Chas. Marvin

The Putnam Nail is the only exclusively Hot-Forged and Hammer-Pointed nail.

Look in your smith's shoeing box, if the nails have smooth edges for the whole length they are the PUTNAM, for they are Hammer-Pointed and are not sheared.

The above shows from a photo representing Mr. Sonner in the act of leading his sire, Sunol, to the anvil to shoe, using the shoes and nails of the Putnam Nail Co. Sunol will be led by the lady of a half mile, and will be shod, while quiet, with both hands, to the wonder of a good many for passage, viz.
