BOTH PLEADED GUILTY.

Golden Brown and Jack Donohue, the Salida Burglars, Undergo a Change of Heart.

CHANGE THEIR PLEAS ADMITTING GUILT

Donohue is Allowed to Plead to Petit Larceny—Both to Be Sentenced Monday—Corbin Gets Six Months.

Golden Brown and Jack Donohue, the Salida sailors, arrested one month on the charge of burglarizing the saloon of Charles Anger at the beach and getting away with upwards of $100 in cash, underwent a change of heart today and admitted their guilt before Judge Morrill.

When the case was continued Wednesday, it was thought by a few of the knowing men that something was in the wind, and that the attorneys for the defendants, plus color caused no particular surprise.

Although both men took a hand in the robbery, Brown was responsible for the subtle of the idea. This obtained, he and his pal went to the proceeding alone, for Donohue was only permitted to plead guilty to petit larceny, so, of course, he could not get more than one year in the county jail. Brown, on the other hand, pleaded guilty to burglary and will go into the State prison for a term not exceeding twenty years.

The defendants were represented in court by Attorneys Fred T. DeBoritte and B. C. Hickman.

They will be sentenced Monday.

CORBIN GETS SIX MONTHS.

James Corbin, who on Tuesday was pleaded guilty to petit larceny, was this morning sentenced by Judge Morrill to six months in the county jail.

Corbin was connected to the police magistrate and June to appear to the charge of burglarizing and getting away with $1 belonging to one Horace Vaw. By the manner of Corbin's attorney Vaw Corbin, he was allowed to plead guilty to petit larceny. The plea he was accused of breaking into is designated as the most flagrant of the kind.

ALLEGED TRADE-MARK INFRINGEMENT.

Case of Faust Against Horne on Trial Before Judge Hiles.

Judge Hiles has been occupied today trying the case of Wm. J. Faust against David Horne and George A. Horne, partners, doing business under the firm name of David Horne & Sons. H. D. Lewis and J. E. Peck appeared for plaintiff and Frank Pierce for the defendants.

Action in this case was commenced in February last by plaintiff, asking that the defendants be enjoined from using the trade mark "Starlike" on printed upon bottles and wrappers, and claimed by Mr. Faust to be his property. A temporary injunction was granted and Judge Bowling has been on the merits of the case.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff has been the manufacturer of ale and of bottler beverages for a long time, and that he has adopted a trade mark, which he placed on the market in packages labeled with the word "Starlike" and made early adopted and used by him ever since February, 1895. The trade mark consists of a star, with the rays meeting on the center and printed upon the wrappers around the bottles.

In February, 1896, the defendants, Horne & Sons, the defendants offered for sale a similar article of bottled beer with the same trade mark, the word "Starlike" printed upon bottles and wrappers, and claimed by Mr. Faust to be his property. A temporary injunction was granted and Judge Bowling has been on the merits of the case.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff has been the manufacturer of ale and of bottled beverages for a long time, and that he has adopted a trade mark, which he placed on the market in packages labeled with the word "Starlike" and made early adopted and used by him ever since February, 1895. The trade mark consists of a star, with the rays meeting on the center and printed upon the wrappers around the bottles.

In February, 1896, the defendants, Horne & Sons, the defendants offered for sale a similar article of bottled beer with the same trade mark, the word "Starlike" printed upon bottles and wrappers, and claimed by Mr. Faust to be his property.