A CONTESTED WILL CASE.

It Commenced Before Probate Judge Hatch Today.

A STRANGE FAMILY AFFAIR.

An Effort Made to Upset the Last Testament of Matthew Condon, of This City.

In the Probate Court this morning, before Judge Hatch, the matter of the estate of Matthew Condon came up on contest.

The admission to probate of the alleged will of the deceased was opposed by his father, Patrick Condon, Sr., who declared that the document offered for probate was not the last will and testament of his son, and that at the time of signing, if he signed it, he was not of sound mind.

That prior and up to the time the document was alleged to have been signed by the deceased he was practically by protracted sickness and the excessive use of intoxicating liquors, and so weakened and enfeebled in mind that he was easily influenced and taken advantage of. He averred that well knowing this fact, and with the intention of procuring the deceased to execute a will under the provisions of which she would receive all of the property of the decedent, Catherine Gills, his sister, some time prior to the alleged signing of the will, caused her brother to be taken to her home at Eureka, the being then a resident of Salt Lake City, where by coercion, persuasion, flattery and assumed love and affection she obtained an undue influence and control over him; and that if the document really was signed by him it was so done on that account.

The deceased, it transpired, was now married. His father in the bill alleges the law. Matthew, who has been engaged in mining pursuits and was nearly fifty years of age, died on September 2nd of the present year. He came from Michigan, and lived in this Territory about eighteen years, and about four in Salt Lake City. The estate is very small, the entire amount being in the neighborhood of $1,000.

Judge Judd represented the contestant and Attorney Pike (of Idaho) was counsel for the executor. The widow, Mrs. Gills, was legally represented by Attorneys Talbot and J. W. Bowden.

The first witness called by Judge Judd was Henry George Wesley Dees, lawyer, Eureka. He had known the deceased, to wit, about two years and was a witness to the will (produced), which was signed by the deceased, in his presence, one morning in the latter part of last August, at Mrs. Gills' house, in Church street, Eureka. Mr. Dees produced the will and read it over to the deceased, who (referring to Mrs. Gills, his sister) said, "This is the best friend I have, and I love her, and I want her to have everything I have got." Mr. Condon was very feeble when he signed (or rather put his mark to) the paper, but certainly appeared to be sound mind. He conversed rationally at the time.

The case may occupy the time of the court for a couple of days. Were the room larger no adjournment would be the first witness was under cross examination by Attorney Talbot.

The father of the deceased man Condon is close upon 80 years of age, and he seems to be easily upset over the injustice which he alleges has been done him in this affair.

OTHER MATTERS.

Judge Hatch also made the following orders:

Estate of Jannett Hitter, deceased. Hearing on final account and petition for distribution come on regularly. Order made for distribution of the residue of the estate.

Estate of Mary Ann Robinson, deceased. Hearing on petition for probate of the will came on for continuance. Order made admitting will to probate. Ellis Ann Robinson was appointed executrix, no filing a bond in the sum of $2000 and taking the necessary oath.

Court Jottings.

Chet Palmentier, who is awaiting trial for bigamy, has been released from the penitentiary on bond.

The case of John Holling vs. the Central Pacific railroad is being heard in the land office. The case involves the south west quarter of section 35, township 11 north, of range 4 west. Holling has filed an affidavit setting forth that he has resided on the land since 1866, and has cultivated nearly all of it since that time.

J. G. Gray has filed an attachment suit in Commissioner Moyer's court against Price & Merrill, proprietors of a saloon known as the West Temple Resort on West Temple street. The amount of the plaintiff's claim is $100, and the saloon has been closed on the attachment.

Sheriff Weber, of Park City, and Deputy Marshal Butcher, of Ogden, are among Salt Lake's visitors at this time. Both are here on official business. Justice R. B. Galen, of Bingham, is also here for a day or two.

Amusement Notes.

The Theatre was not quite so crowded last night, at the second performance of the National Pageant as the previous evening, but still there was a large audience and the various tableaux were enthusiastically applauded. The minuet, the hospital scene, the "Jubilee concert" and the final tableau were those which particularly kindled the admiration of the spectators. About $1000 will be handed over to St. Mark's hospital as the result of the two performances.

ALEXANDER SALVINI.

The great theatrical event of the season, the appearance of Salvini in his excellent repertoire, takes place tonight and following evenings of this week. "Don Cesar de Bazan" commences the engagement this evening, to be followed by "The Three Guardsmen" tomorrow and Saturday matinee, and "Cavaliers Rusticana" on Saturday night.

The curtain of the Theatre are to be rounded that the curtain rises promptly at 8 o'clock.

SOME ROYAL BON-VIVANTS.

HOW THE EMPEROR WILLIAM OF GERMANY THROWS UP AT TABLE.

The case of an ice finnan has a gigantic appetite, or rather the appetite of a giant. He commences the day by breakfasting at seven o'clock with tea, bacon, eggs and cold roast beef; at 11 o'clock lunch, consisting of eggs beaten up in broth, mutton chops, cold game, chicken, fish, vegetables, sweets, all washed down with several cups of strong coffee. The case is very fond of fish, and generally dines to eat the fish he himself has caught, and has it served every meal. At 5 o'clock he will eat a plain rice pudding. It is needless to say his dinner is splendid and succulent, which does not prevent him taking his coffee and cakes before going to rest, says the Brussels Banner.

The queen of Sweden adores the meal she made in Nice, with olive oil and hard-boiled eggs, and is very fond of the Swedish national dish—salmon preserved in the grease.

His imperial majesty of Germany is very difficult, but, having eaten beef in England in his youth has a decided taste for ham and eggs and buffalo, which, on all, he gets direct from London to eat with his tea in the morning, and prefers English to German cooking. His majesty's favorite drinks are beer and champagne, but it must be said that in the latter he is most abstemious.

Prince Bismarck, like the Czar, is an enormous eater, but eats little in the morning, reserving himself for dinner at 7 o'clock in the evening, when he devours the soup, salmon, game, fowl, tartlets, cheese, fruit, etc.; he also drinks like a fish. Cue drinks, one dried salmon.

The Empress of Austria occupies herself personally with her menu, and so be practical she has invented a spit where her owls can be roasted at once. Both she and the emperor eat little, but the bride is the best served in Europe; and it is said her majesty makes all the linen for her husband's eating.

Louise Philippe, king of the French, was not a great eater, but his song, the "Ma d'Amelie," is Mathieu's favorite air, and the Duchess of Louis XIV's family ever committed suicide.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte was a great gourmand, while Napoleon III and the Prince Imperial had the best appetite, of which he was very proud. Umbrella made his key sparkles after a good dinner. Prince Oscar Carolo has the best table in France, the elements of his orbits, and, consequently, must have a clear conscience and good health.

The king of the Belgians is a noted gourmand, that being indulged among his other vices.

The king of the Hellenes likes Dublin cooking, Queen Olga likes Russian, and as there are not pleasure everybody, French cookery is added for their benefit.

King Humbert of Italy eats but little, contrary to his father Victor Emanuel, who was a born viveur in every sense of the word; Queen Margherita is the only royal gourmand the fair sex can boastful; she is said to have a piece of strawberries served her every day during the year.

Suicides in European Armies.

The Austrian army takes the lead in the matter of suicides. From 1873 to 1882 it yearly averaged 122 suicides (a proportion of 1 to 10,000 soldiers) in troops. In 1889 the number was 159. Death by suicide represents a fifth part of the whole mortality of the Austrian army. Suicides are more deadly. The German army comes next. Prussia and the Rhine army stand second, Saxony and Bavaria in the rear. In the German army the rate is the lowest, while in the Spanish army it is the highest.

There are some curious facts about these suicides. In the European armies, especially in Austria, it is the young soldiers who kill themselves during the first months of their service. Recruits are the most frequent among the cavalry and infantry, and in the latter among the soldiers who are accused and await their trial.

The most frequent method is shooting, though hanging and drowning are frequent methods. The infantry use firearms and usually run at their heads. The mounted soldiers hang themselves by their horse halters. The Algerian soldiers almost always shoot themselves through the body, perhaps because the Arabs think it is infamous to mutilate the dead. In Austria a third of the suicides are attributed to a desire for military duty; in France, fear trouble is a frequent cause; the fear of punishment is every where a great incentive. The maximum of suicides is reached in the hottest weather, and the minimum is reached in the coldest weather.—Boston Herald.

A Statue of Jupiter Olympus.

There is a difference of opinion as to which of the seven wonders of the world deserves the title of the "most magnificent," yet as the majority of these wonders have disappeared it is somewhat difficult to arrive at a true decision. The sculpture appears, however, to be pretty fairly balanced between the gold and ivory statue of Jupiter Olympus and the Temple of Diana at Ephesus. The statue of Jupiter was the work of Phidias a celebrated Athenian sculptor; it was sixty feet high and it is said to have exhibited a majestic representation of the Grecian mind, and mingled wonder and terrible associated with human nature in the awful majesty of the "king of gods and men," indeed, according to an ancient Greek epigram, it seemed that either Phidias had descended to heaven to adore Jupiter, or Jupiter had descended to earth to sit to Phidias.

The god was that in a robe of solid gold, ornamented with lilies and other flowers, and the golden robe supported his thunderbolt. The throne was of cedar, inlaid with ebony, gold, ivory and precious stones, with enlightened representations of the destruction of Nioba's children, the contests of Hercules and other exploits of the heroes; on the top of the throne were three figures, the Graces, and the Graces on each corner a figure of Victory, dancing upon a spider, who was beating a Theban youth. The whole superstitious magnificence of this god were fitted all concerning strength, that these into despair and admiration at a distance all connections.

JOS. F. SMITH.

An aged lady who was present at a Connecticut town felt the honor of giving a toast to need to some patriotic. All who applied to have their toasts printed could have it done free, provided they would prove they had not been a dog in the river and make oath that they will not drink one in future. The aged lady, who had never tasted a drop of liquor, which is itself a proof that it ought to be avoided, said:

"I'm very sure good that it ought to be true if it is not. But even if it is true that old Bally's home will probably pinch the will on the ground that the testator was crazy. But was she so crazy? Does really unfortunate her she arrived step by step to her relief at the conclusion that degradation is synonymous with happiness, living in a city flat, in a home where, in spite of its opulence, it is a boarding house, where had suffered nature from the loss, the smells, the dog notes scattered about peanuts only to the dirty little bands kept there by women who have nothing useful to do. As for me, if they have anything useful to do they neglect it and spend their time over the dogs. The old lady had witnessed the spectacle of a large woman leading a very small dog into a restaurant with a string, the dog was three times taller than the man's new up against their own and found them excellent, exclaimed, "Now you another, Tiny!" Then she got sick, and just went off and made this will.

This story is was the gamest woman of her time.

The World's Hymns.

It appears that there have been written or attempted to be written 40,000 Christian hymns. Of these "Julian's Dictionary of Hymnology" makes mention of 10,000. Mr. Julian is of opinion that Charles Wesley is the hymn writer of the age, though this would be disputed by Protestant Germans no doubt. They would place Martin Luther at the head of hymn writers. Luther gave to the world thirty-seven sacred songs, of which the noblest is that grand rolling anthem, "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott," which Frederick the Great said was "God Almighty's gracious firmament."

Of the 50,000 hymns in the Julian dictionary nobody will be surprised to learn that 2,500 begin with "Oh" and 198 with "And." It was not from the Established church in England that the most inspiring and musical Protestant hymns came. The credit belongs to the dissenters, the Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists. Dr. Watts, the Wesleys and Dr. Doddridge, Charles Wesley alone wrote 4,000. James Montgomery, an atheist, wrote 2,000. Watts and Charlotte Elliott 150. Henry Francis Lyte wrote 13 hymns, and he gave the beautiful one beginning "Abide with me."

What was once considered deeply theological and poetic would not always be the result today in the hymnology of our time. For instance, an old version of part of the musical service for Palm Sunday says:

"Ride on! Ride on! ride on!
And mount thine ass
Upon the lofty hill come
Thou Christ, Jesus Christ!
Hosanna!"

Herrick wrote a "Litany to the Holy Spirit," in which were these stanzas:

"When the seven spirits rise
Into the blest seat of Heaven
And with their seven times seven
Kneel round the throne of God,

"When the poets and the lyrics
Shall meet, of Heaven and
Have their voices tuned and pitched
Right to the Holy Ghost,

"Then shall we, with the angels
Sing Holy, Holy, Holy!"

How the Mosquito Bites It.

A mosquito bill is so delicate and intricate and complete that they cannot be taken without a microscope. It is a marvel of art and ingenuity. The mosquito is also employed as a pump. The sucker is large and flexible, and the tube, all in one, and which is pointed. The tube is so large that it is a marvel of mechanism in the world of animal things. It is first forced into the flesh and the sucking is commenced by the sucker, which is made to fill the tube in the manner of a pump. The sucking is what causes the irritation which is felt by the bitten.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Politics and Pleasure.

A senior English lodge-keeper goes to the bookmaker's at his working hours, and is not ashamed to be seen in a cabinet for a week, as years ago he was too far gone in peer society of the young ladies' association and not to be that fond of fast life as the young ladies' association. He was an amiable young lady and was allowed by all who knew her. A fine curse of friends as will be for better and other his gouty man and a friend.
