POWDER EXPLOSION.

Disaster in a Two-Story Brick Building in New Orleans.

ONE BURIED IN THE RUINS.

Supposed to be the Work of some Madcap or the Result of the Dullest Bolts as a Means of Revenge.

NEW ORLEANS, April 6.—About 2 o'clock this morning an explosion took place in a two-story brick building situated on the corner of Bienville and Tonti streets, in the rear of the Grand Opera House. The building was occupied by Mr. Hunter as a cigar factory, and the explosion is supposed to have been caused by some madcap who had placed a bomb in the building. The entire front of the building was blown out, and the contents were scattered in all directions, including the sidewalk and the street. The building was a two-story brick, and was not very large. The roof was blown off, and the walls were cracked from top to bottom. The building is a mass of ruins, and it is impossible to ascertain the extent of the damage. The building is owned by Mr. Hunter, who occupies the second story as a cigar factory. The ground floor is occupied by Mr. Hunter as a cigar store
