BREED UP FOR BEEF.

There used to be a time when Utah beef was the favorite to any market to which it had access, just as Utah potatoes were famous from the Father of waters to the Golden Gate, and Utah dried peaches filled the whole nation with enthusiasm. The decadence of the potato and the peach has been dwelt upon in these columns many times, and the causes thereof explained. But what is the matter with the home-raised breed of beef?

Experts in the business of buying and selling cattle assert that in all markets where the Utah product comes in competition with that from other parts, ours is almost invariably quoted at a lower figure. Utah steers have a black eye to all the quotations and are materially discriminated against in all orders either for purchase or sale. The anomaly of this condition is rendered more striking by the fact that Utah mutton are in an exactly opposite column. Our sheep are prime favorites everywhere; they command the highest prices, and their quality is so superior that a late shipment was actually sent alive clear to England—an unusual proceeding when the extra expense over that of the cold storage of the slaughtered animals is considered.

There should be no reason for this unhappy degradation into which local beef has fallen. No ranges offer sweeter grasses than our mountain sides and high valleys, while for winter-feeding, nothing but thought, attention and proper provender of the sort readily at hand, can be needed. The trouble undoubtedly lies in the breeding of the stock. Inferior grades and varieties are permitted to multiply, and the herds are not properly graded up by the frequent introduction of new and good blood. The invaluable service the late William Jennings and others like him gave the Territory in their example and interest in this department ought to be better appreciated today, and more of our citizens should take pattern from them. There is no reason why Utah cattle should not be as popular as Utah sheep, nor why both of them should need to feel afraid of competition in any market in the world.

SILVER'S OUTLOOK.

The partisan press is using up a great deal of editorial space these days in explaining and justifying or condemning—as the case may be—the attitude of two or three recent political conventions with reference to the silver question. The comments thus vouchsafed are less enlighting than deceptive, less instructive than technical, less honest than ingenious. Those papers which favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver are only constrained in their distress at their own party's failure to climb upon that platform, by the fact that the opposing party has also fought shy of the glittering issue. Those which stand for what they call an "honest dollar," meaning a gold one only, are equally chagrined at, though they attempt to gloss over, what they call the equivocal expressions of their own party, though the same kind of expressions by their political opponents are branded as a cowardly and disgraceful straddle.

Out of all the talk pro and con, the charges, counter-charges and multiplied injunctions, which profit neither do they teach, this fact seems clear: neither of the great parties is going to allow itself to be committed to the proposed experiment in monetary policy. Perhaps it is better, even for the silver men themselves, that it is so. Opponents are tempted to relax the violence of their defense, and to study the merits of the case with more calmness. Still more important is the effect which this pause of the quadrennial exercises upon foreign countries, with whom co-operation even the gold men admit that bimetallism can be made gen uine and beneficial. The growth of a silver sentiment in Germany is sturdy and rapid; France is already confirmedly committed to it; while the recent ministerial changes in England have placed men at the head whose bimetallic views are known to the last degree, and at the backs of the party in power a constituency that is strongly inclined to accept the silver solution of the monetary problem.

On the whole the situation as at present defined offers much that is promising to the (bi-)minded and the conservative of all parties; it is unquestionably more favorable than it was six months or even sixty days ago. Anticipating the tendency toward a tender and fitter reconstruction of the question by an authority on the "sound money" side, we conclude with an extract from the Financial Chronicle, a journal which, as the American Banker intimates, "has never been suspected of shooting after game."

We believe that all arrangements for putting the anti-silver plank in position, furthermore, are of the opinion, with the capital workers and the world's commerce, should so they are—more than ever of the people population having a vote, coinage; but it is not only a financial understanding, but a highly desirable if not an essential union. It does not affect our confidence in the healthfulness and success of the great joint movement (somewhat) many of other concerned thinks differently. There are also very many who hold the opposite view. Doubtless we have lived many years, and during that long life we never felt so impossible with to be undecided, but we have lost half of the object of the experiment in the attempt against it, proving exactly on known facts that it was impossible. We need go back no farther than the Atlantic subscription for a suggestive illustration. No one has forgotten Mr. Field's struggles and success against the opposition of the insane folly furnished by so many else conspicuous. Indeed, the history of this country's progress is marked all the way through by a series of successes obtained in vexatious plain economic trains—a series with a succession almost as frequent as the successive steps in our development from birth.

OUR OARSMEN ABROAD.

One failure of the international boat race just beginning at Henley on the Thames, in which American crews are represented by a sixty crew from Cornell university, is thoroughly unpalatable and foolish to the Western democratic taste. A condition to participation was imposed upon by the English oarsmen to the effect that no member of the American competing crew should have ever engaged in manual labor for a living; they wished it understood that there were to be "gentlemen's races," dilettanti know. We should have been more gratified with our colegiates if with true, native pluck they had insisted that to be a gentleman in this country does not necessarily mean to be an idler. They ought to have said bluntly to the Britishers that neither wealth nor birth or itself constitutes a true and typical American gentleman; that an American boy who works and saves enough to go to college, or even eke out his subsistence while there by manual toil outside of study hours, is good enough to meet either in athletic or intellectual contests with any Englishman living, though the latter have a pedigree a yard long and titles and crests and that kind of thing plastered all over him.

The Cornell boys did not express themselves with sufficient firmness on this point, confounding themselves with mild protesting for a time against the obnoxious condition. Their countrymen would have been prouder of them if they had rejected the un-American proposition altogether, even though their refusal to entertain it had resulted in the total failure of the negotiations; and they do not deserve as much of the national faith and hope for their success in the contests as would otherwise have attended them. Nevertheless, the derive on this side is universal that they may give a good account of themselves, pull long and strong together, and make the stately bosom of the Thames fairly flutter with their feathering blades. To be a representative of America is something to a man's credit, although the latter is somewhat tarnished when he affects the tenderness of a brand-new cad.

THE BOOK OF MORMON THE KEY.

The discovery of an ancient copper mine in Montana, announced a few days ago in a dispatch from Butte, is likely to interest students of American archæology and perhaps furnish some clue to the solution of problems with which they at present are grappling. Who are the people that worked those mines in ages past?

The report had it that two reliable prospectors found evidences of a copper ledge in the mountains about sixty miles southeast of Butte, and that they, while searching for the ledge, discovered a tunnel that led into a well developed mine. The tunnel was walled with huge blocks of rock while the roof was supported by flat stones. As the South of the tunnel was a close one, giving evidently, as the work had been abandoned. The implements found were all of stone similar to those discovered in the mounds of the Mississippi valley, indicating, it would seem, that the civilization claimed by the race occupying the northern continent in those remote times was very much on a level, and certainly far superior to that of the Indians found in the new world by Europeans in the Eleventh and sixteenth centuries.

The discovery of such evidences of an early civilization in the western mountains, lately inhabited by that of the well known nations of Asia and Europe, may not be considered so inexplicable any longer, because they are already all over Mexico, Central and North America, but the questions of how, when and by whom, remain to be solved. The theory of that civilization as the cradle of the human race, which is the only one that will explain the mystery of the ancient inhabitants of America, while the human family is the only species possessed and inhabiting, seems clearer, if anything, in the light of modern discoveries.

Evidences of the Old World civilization of archæology have found in the earliest sacred records the first hints as to the origin of nations and their distribution on a large area of the globe, and researches in the various branches of science bearing on this subject have affirmed the authenticity of the sacred writings. With regard to the New World the result will finally be similar. After all resources have been exhausted, the account in the Book of Mormon, a synopsis of records of the ancient inhabitants of America, will be found to offer the only true and rational guide into these dark mysteries of the past. According to this authority, three different colonies at different times came over from the Old World. One left Asia at the time of the confusion of tongues, as related in Genesis; another party left Palestine about six hundred years before Christ, at the time that country was threatened with invasion and desolation; and a few years later another party, also from Palestine, crossed the ocean and landed safely in this continent. If to these facts be added another, which undoubtedly will be recognized when science has penetrated far enough into the depths of antiquity, that man first appeared and developed upon this continent, before the flood, there is no great difficulty in accounting for the various evidences of very ancient and somewhat diversified civilizations, although similar in some features, still found all over America. It is just what may be expected.

The Book of Mormon is equally plain on the question of the retrogression of the descendants of these ancient peoples. As far as their history is outlined, it accounts satisfactorily for the causes that led to it and the results wrought. That record is undoubtedly the key to American archæology, and Continuous facts testimony to the genuineness and authenticity of its record.

It was John Adams who wrote that the great anniversary festival commemorating American independence "ought to be solemnized with pomp, shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward forever." But the giant Bloviacker, the cannon-spitting boom, and the unfeathered toy pistol had not attained their present prominence in the art of blowing off the thumbs and put the eyes of young America at the time that sentiment was written.

THE FOLLOWING, from the Denver Field and Farm, is taken from Sly Hubert (novel):

Every western state and territory is improving and every farm is being worked for all it is worth. It is stated that Utah now has 1,000,000 of people and has irrigated under cultivation over 600,000 bushels of grain annually. Utah has more small farmers and more rural families than Colorado. In short, reports Utah is a greater city than that brought by the Colorado men.

THAT UNCLE SAM'S boys have literally "money to burn," even to hard times, is shown by the figures of the revenue from tobacco for the fiscal year just ended—nearly thirty million dollars. Even that enormous sum represents only the tax on the products of the weed, and does not include the cost of the material.

A DENVER law provides that all drunken persons shall be taken to their homes in carriages at the expense of the publican who supplied them with liquor. The trouble is that a person sufficiently drunken doesn't usually appreciate a carriage ride, no matter at whose expense.

Agreeable Surprises.

"I had a very severe cold on my lungs that caused much soreness and gave me considerable uneasiness in regard to the result," says Mr. T. E. Smith, of Hillsboro, Mass. "A local druggist called my attention to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and on his recommendation I gave the remedy a careful trial. The result surprised me; I recovered entirely in three days." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by druggists.

Mr. W. J. Falvey, of La Ger, N. Y., says: "Have used fifty cents worth of Parks' Cough Syrup is the only one that helps me. I think it is the best Cough remedy." For sale by F. J. Hill & Co., and Nelson Dudek Drug Co.

AN OPINION GIVEN.

Recently Mr. J. D. Thomas, of North Dakota, visited the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, and after carefully examining the country located in Winchester, he writes to Mr. V. Hinrichs, Land and Immigration Agent, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Baltimore, Maryland, as follows: "I have been in nearly every state and territory of the United States, and am back in my opinion that this valley surpasses all other sections in the Union. The lands are low in price, and produce profitable crops. I thank you for directing me here, and select those seeking pleasant and profitable homes to locate in this country."
