Desperate Mexican Prisoners Try to Break Jail.—Opals Taken From Snake River Mines, Etc.

Opals taken out of the Snake river mines are being offered for sale on the streets of Boise city.

The Colorado Coal and Iron Development company has increased its capital stock from $2,500,000 to $5,000,000.

Mrs. Arcadia Bauer has recovered $10,000 damages in the superior court at Los Angeles, from the Southern California Railway company for the overflowing of her land by the Los Angeles river, caused by an embankment of the defendant company.

An unsuccessful attempt to break jail has been made at Tombstone, Ariz., by two Mexican prisoners. One of them so called the jailer, who knocked him down with an iron pedlock. The other tackled the jailer's assistant, but was soon knocked out also.

F. H. Neff came down from the mines Sunday with a broken arm which he wanted set. He was working around the engine in the saw mill at Atlanta with a pair of wet gloves on. His left hand caught in the belting, crew his arm in under the pulley and broke it.—Wind River (Wyoming) Mountaineer.

The hearing in the case of F. A. Wilkie, arrested for embezzling $1,051 of funds belonging to the Baptist church, Boise, Idaho, of which he was treasurer, has been postponed. The case is a sad one. He is a young man who has hitherto sustained a good reputation.

While grouting near Lovelocks, four miles east of Virginia, Nevada, W. Schumm, a local sportsman, discovered a writhing mass of rattlesnakes in a cleft in the face of a rocky cliff. The hunter promptly stole giant powder and exploded it in the cleft, killing all of the reptiles, numbering 289. In corroboration of the truth of his story Mr. Schumm exhibited nearly a quart of rattles cut from the harmless end of the slaughtered reptiles. The largest of the rattlers measured six feet in length.

Mr. Jolly's family lives about two miles north of town. The little daughter walks to school these fine mornings. A few days ago, as she was about to cross the bridge on the ditch at the northeast corner of town, she passed near a large water snake which lay coiled at the side of the road. The snake sprang at her, and to great fright she ran. The snake gave chase, but the child was able to gain on it a little. She ran to an old cabin standing near the roadside, and, as the sills of the logs afforded a convenient ladder, she hastily climbed upon it. The snake ran to the cabin and made two efforts to reach her. It made one hour of inspection close around the cabin, but finally crawled away. An investigation of the surroundings shows that the snake must have cleared the chimney 20 yards.—Grand Junction (Col.) News.

Sheriff Oldham has received a telegram from Arthur Neal of Seattle, Wash., requesting him to arrest his wife, Mrs. Jennie Neal, nee Moore, if she put in an appearance in this city, says the Idaho Daily Statesman. She is wanted for robbing her husband, who is running a hotel in Seattle. The amount of which he was robbed was not given in the telegram. This is the second time that Neal has been made the victim of his wife's duplicity and dishonesty. A short time ago, in this city, Neal complained that his wife had robbed him of $5000. He had her arrested, and after a short trial in Judge Gyrd's court, the matter was compromised by Mrs. Neal returning all of the money but $1,000 of the amount alleged to have been appropriated by her. J. W. Badger, Neal's attorney, charged $500 for legal services, which Neal refused to pay. Suit was brought and a judgment of $500 was rendered in favor of the attorney. Failure it could be collected, however, Neal removed to Seattle. A transcript of the judgment has been filed in that city and an effort will be made to collect the amount due. Mrs. Neal remained in this city a short while after her husband's departure and then followed him. By her "winning" ways Mrs. Neal gradually regained the confidence of the wronged husband. A few days ago, as the telegram reads, Neal missed a large sum of money. His wife was also missing. It was afterwards ascertained that she left the city very suddenly the night before with another man and has not since been heard of. Mrs. Neal bids fair to become as conspicuous a figure in the Washington courts as she has been in the courts of this state.

HOW ROBINS NEST.

They Have a Front and Back Door and Are Very Careful About Their Use.

Although many interesting points in relation to the nesting habits of our friends, the birds, have appeared, I have yet to see anything concerning the position which the prospective parent assumes while incubating. The subject has been of much interest to me, and in the past years many observations have been made, which plainly indicate that the proprietors of nearly all nests have their exits and their entrances.

Many there are, as the kingfishers, woodpeckers and other species, which reach their edge by a single opening or burrow, and these of necessity must emerge from the same source, but all seem to have a well defined position in entering.

All can remember the attitude of the domestic hen, turkey or goose, and how rarely this position is changed; and with the wild bird the tendency is to a shift in even less, for with barnyard fowls we can alter their posture by placing a board in a variety of positions about the nest, but with the relatives of the wood any interference generally results in desertion.

The robin when building her nest often time here her breeding house is to fit the opening structure and this she does, when a bare, flat platform gives no indication of the elevated sides to follow. Later the mode she is to be forming cup and speculate probably on the outcome of his efforts, and views the outlook from the crotch. During the four days of egg laying the female is not on, or rather in, the structure to any extent, unless the weather is cold or wet, and she assumes almost any position. It is only after the duties of incubation begin, a period which lasts fourteen days to a day, that the robin adopts a stand, and, shared in by each of the pair.

The male, who shares in the duties of sitting, when going to take his trick almost invariably flies toward his mate in the same path, and arriving at the back door, just as his feet are about to touch the edge, the female is seen to dart forward between the branches which comprise the front door. This front door, as I prefer to call it is then really the exit, and toward it the incubating bird always points her bill. It never directs toward the two trunk and generally points toward an open space in the foliage when a thick leaved tree or bush.—Science.

HARD TO UNDERSTAND.

"Men laughed at me for having senseless notions and doing things for which we can give no good reason," said a woman recently. "I wish some man would explain to me why he carries unimportant papers about with him for months, wearing them out in so doing. I've often watched my husband carefully change the contents of coat or trousers pockets from one suit of clothes to another. Soiled, worn envelopes and folded papers are tenderly transferred, and for a long time I was impressed with the importance of the operation and drew an instinctive breath of relief when it was safely over. One day my curiosity got the better of me and I begged for a sight of those mysterious documents guarded with such jealous care.

"To please me my husband went through them. He found several unimportant bills some one had been paid and receipts filed, a note from a friend dated three months back, regretting that he didn't find him in his office when he called, one or two business cards of firms he had an recollection of knowing, several settlement circulars, a playbill of last season's performance, preserved for some forgotten temporary reason, and perhaps three really important papers among the whole lot. And I honestly believe if I had not prompted the investigation, Mr. — would be treasuring those worthless bits of paper to this day."—The Point of View in New York Times.

DR. FREEMAN AT CAIO.

The late Professor Freeman, the English historian, had something of Gladstone's disregard for the ordinary rules of courtesy. It is said that some years ago, when he visited Yale, one of the college professors addressed him as Dr. Freeman.

"Doctor! Why, doctor!" returned the historian, who, since he had received the degree of doctor of civil laws at Oxford and that of doctor of laws at Cambridge.

"I thought you were entitled to the doctorate," was the reply.

"Suppose I am! So is Gladstone. Would you address him?

"No, sir," said the Yale man, somewhat disgusted. "I certainly would not apply so insignificant a title to a man of Gladstone's eminence."—Youth's Companion.

THE DESERT DEAD.

Years ago a millionaire died in Paris. At church, while the priests were reciting the prayers for the dead over the body, all the mourners were stilled by the fervor with which one of the heirs was reading out of a book which he held in his hand, and which was supposed to be a collection of prayers for the deceased. A neighbor happening to glance at it discovered that the little volume was nothing more nor less than a copy of the civil code, open at the chapter on successions.—Tesoro da.
