

TERRIBLE FATE OF OSCAR FROISLAND

Demented, the Cause Being Prolonged Sickness, He Wandered Away to the Hills.

BODY EATEN BY ANIMALS.

A Lock of Hair, Some Torn Clothing and a Few Scraps of Paper Are All That Tell Where He Died.

That Oscar Froisland, the 19-year-old youth who mysteriously disappeared from the home of his father, M. O. Froisland, No. 47 south West Temple street, on Jan. 11, fell victim to the winter death of the snow clad hills and then became the prey of devouring animals, was established yesterday in the finding of scraps of clothing that had been worn by him at the time of his disappearance, his shoes, a pocket-book and papers identified as having belonged to him.

This gruesome relics telling of the fate of the young man were found by Lon Covington of 563 Somerby street, yesterday afternoon, almost at the snow line in Bountiful canyon, high up in the hills about eight miles north of Salt Lake. Mr. Covington, with his son, were out horseback riding at the time and when the torn clothing, partly gnawed hat and the shoes, were espied, they galloped back to the water-works in City Creek canyon from where the police were notified. The patrol wagon with Driver Brown, Detective Howell and Patrolman McMartin, was sent out to the scene and gathered up all that could be found of the clothing and the only physical portion of the body remaining there, a tuft of brown hair. Such clothing as could be found was identified by the family of the boy, the collar showing his laundry mark, and the papers, which included a fitting receipt in favor of himself, a certificate of appointment to a deaconship and photos of his friends, together with a notebook, completed the identification.

This morning, Michael and Lawrence Froisland, two brothers, accompanied by Patrolmen Conyers and McMartin, left on horseback for the purpose of searching the hills for the remains of the boy.

WAS SOMEWHAT DEMENTED. Young Froisland, who by reason of sickness had been slightly irresponsible and suffering from a mild form of dementia for some time before his disappearance, was last seen in the office of the president of the Church, on the forenoon of Jan. 11. That morning he had left his home, stopping at his father's tailor shop, on West Temple street, and from there had gone to the Church office, where he met President John Winder. To the latter Froisland at the time offered a strange appearance, answering all questions with an "I don't know."

Leaving the office he had evidently wandered into City Creek canyon and from there crossed the divide and entered Bountiful canyon, where, overcome with fatigue and the numbing exhaustion of the winter, he lay down in the snow to enter the unconscious sleep of the white death.

Before sinking down he had evidently trudged some distance through the snow in his stocking feet, this evidence being gathered from the finding of the shoes unlaced and some distance from the other remains. The shoes were new, and had only been worn a few days. He had complained of them hurting his feet and blistering his heels, and it is conjectured that after his long tramp, his mind wandering under the sleep-producing cold, he had removed his shoes to obtain relief from the pain.

The remnants of clothing found plainly tell that after death he was attacked by coyotes. The shirt was torn in shreds and bloodstained, the hat gnawed and the trousers showing that they had been torn away with sharp teeth.

NOW SEARCH FOR BONES.

It is now the hope of the family of the unfortunate young man that at least his bones may be found, and these, it is thought, still lie hidden under the snow in that vicinity.

The father and mother, with five brothers, Olaf, Haakon of Los Angeles, Christian, Lawrence and Michael, and one sister, Gertrude, survive the decedent. The grief of the family was intensified by the tragedy of the fate that overtook the son and brother, and yet relief was found in the termination of the suspense which has hung over the household for the past four months. During all that time, ever since the day of the disappearance, a constant search in every quarry had been kept up, for some information or clue to the whereabouts of the lad or his fate. From time to time information was received by the family that a young man answering the description of the missing youth had been seen at various points, each instance resulting in the shattering of false hopes.

A memorial service will be held for the dead boy next Sunday in the Fourteenth ward chapel.

ZEALOUS GAME WARDEN.

Bell Phone Traffic Expert Runs Up Against Davis County Sleuth.

M. E. Wright, traffic expert of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company, has decided that local folks in Utah have a jealous eye on the fish and game resources of the state, and that suspicious circumstances are sufficient to make them act.

His trouble grew out of a photographing expedition he made to Farmington canyon yesterday. His camera was equipped with a telescoping tripod. He put in most of the day in the canyon, getting views, and on his return to the station in the evening, he was confronted with the local game warden, who inquired pleasantly:

"Well, did you get some good ones?"

"Yes, indeed, I got some very fine ones," said Mr. Wright.

"I suppose you know what the law is in such cases made and provided?"

"I didn't know any laws were in such cases made and provided."

"Well, there is, and I must do me duty. But where is them fish?"

"Fish? What fish? I haven't any fish."

"What did you do with 'em?"

"I haven't seen any for a long time."

"Wasn't you fishin' up the canyon to-day?"

"Fishing? Why, certainly not! This is Sunday."

"What was you doin' with a pole then?"

"I didn't have a pole. All I had was this camera," displaying it.

The mystery was then explained to the game warden, who grasped immediately that the opening and closing of the telescope tripod led the alert residents to believe Mr. Wright had a fishing rod. He satisfied the game warden, but the game warden insisted on Mr. Wright's accompanying him to the homes of the suspicious residents to show them what the supposed fishing rod was. Mr. Wright pleaded a pressing engagement in town, but in vain. He was forced to visit several homes to display the workings of his tripod. The delay made him miss his train and he got to town late and hungry, but much impressed by the activity of the people of Davis county.

MARSHAL SMYTH RETURNS.

Trip to Leavenworth With C. C. Slade Was Without Incident.

United States Marshal Lucian H. Smyth returned yesterday morning from Leavenworth, Kansas, where he went with C. C. Slade, convicted of robbing the United States mails.

Speaking of his trip with his prisoner, Marshal Smyth said: "Slade was allowed as much liberty as possible en route, and he never once abused his privileges. His spirits were buoyant most of the way, though he appeared somewhat depressed the second day out. He overcame that feeling, however, and as the end of the journey grew nearer, he became much more cheerful. He seemed to have but one desire, and that was to do what is required of him."

"As soon as we reached Leavenworth, we went to dinner, after which Slade wrote a letter to his wife, and was then turned over to the authorities. He seemed to feel much better than he did during the whole trip when he was about to enter upon the serving of his sentence."

DEATH OF BRILLIANT WOMAN.

Mrs. Frank G. Eastman Succumbs to Attack of Typhoid.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Eastman were deeply pained to learn of the death of Mrs. Eastman at Detroit Saturday from the effects of typhoid fever. Mrs. Eastman had been ill for several weeks, and her husband only Thursday returned from her bedside, confident that she would recover. According to the telegraphic dispatch, however, she suffered a relapse and passed away Saturday.

Mrs. Eastman had a large number of friends in Salt Lake City, where she was well known as a newspaper and magazine writer of ability. She came here from Detroit, and two years ago was married to Frank G. Eastman, city editor of the Salt Lake Herald. Three months ago she left for her old home in Detroit to make a visit, and was stricken with the dread disease typhoid. From this illness she never recovered. An only child, Rex Richard Eastman, survives.

EQUADOR THREW OFF YOKE CENTURY AGO

Don Manuel De Guerrero of Quito Tells Purpose of Great Exposition.

Don Manuel De Guerrero, of Quito, Ecuador, spent Sunday in this city. Don Guerrero is in this country in the interest of the forthcoming centennial exposition, to be held in the capital of Ecuador from Aug. 10 to Oct. 10 of the present year. The exposition is to mark the hundredth anniversary of the throwing off of the Spanish yoke by the little South American country, and according to Sr. Guerrero, the affair is to be a magnificent success. "Great interest is being taken in the exposition all over South America," said Sr. Guerrero, who speaks English fluently, "and we hope to create a similar interest in the great republic of North America. We hope to interest our manufacturers to send exhibits to our country, and thus increase the trade between the United States and the South American republics. This is a great year down in Ecuador. The people are enthusiastic over the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of their independence, and everything indicates that nothing will be lacking to make the occasion a complete success."

"Quito lies in the heart of the Andes exactly under the equator," said Sr. Guerrero, "and is built in a ravine of great beauty at an elevation of 9,350 feet. West of it and close at hand is the volcano, Pichincha. Thirty-four miles to the south of the city, Cotacachi, the highest active volcano and the most beautiful snow capped mountain in the world, thrusts its almost inaccessible peak into the clouds. Its crater is 2,800 feet in diameter, and it figures in history on account of the terror it inspired in the hearts of the Spanish soldiers who witnessed it in full eruption when Pizarro invaded the realm of the Incas, of which Ecuador formed a part, in 1534. Quito, an old city of the Incas, was incorporated as a city by royal charter granted by Charles V. in 1540, and became a famous seat of learning in its earliest days. It now contains a population of 80,000 and is of considerable importance as a manufacturing center. Its chief products being coarse cottons and woollens, carpets, blankets, leather and jewelry. The Indians still practise their ancient arts and methods, and the goods made by them are prized highly by collectors. The climate of Quito is perpetual spring. The temperature remains the same all the year, the verdure is luxuriant and the snow line of the surrounding mountains stands always at 15,700 feet above the sea. In the neighborhood are wonderful ruins of palaces, temples and roads built in the days of the Incas, and the city is full of old churches, convents and hospitals dating from the early Spanish period. The old Spanish mine and university are still in use. Guayaquil, the chief port of the country, lies 150 miles south of Quito, and communication between these points is over a railroad which runs up through the remarkable central valley of the Andes on each side of which are mountains higher than any in the United States. Guayaquil contains a population of about 50,000 and is famous for its Panama hats. It has been rebuilt since the fire which practically destroyed it in 1896.

"The exposition will continue three months," continued Sr. Guerrero. "The passenger journey from New York to Quito takes about three weeks. All exhibits will be admitted free of duty and should be consigned to the central committee, accompanied by certified consular invoices. The consul-general of Ecuador at No. 11 Broadway is authorized to respond to applications for space, or application could be made to any other consular representative of the country, or to Ernest H. Vands, United States commissioner to the exposition, care department of state, Washington. Exhibits should reach Guayaquil not later than the first of June."

CORNERSTONE LAID.

Ceremonies Are Held by Danish Lutherians on Church Site.

The cornerstone of the new Danish Lutheran church was laid, at the corner of First avenue and E street, yesterday afternoon, by Rev. Harold Jensen. After he had placed the usual documents in the stone, the cross bricks for the altar, baptismal font, pulpit and organ were laid. The Danish consul, Mr. Beck of Chicago, laying the first of them, and Vice Consul Orlof of this city the second. Addresses were made, and the national hymn of Denmark sung. Consul Beck, whose jurisdiction covers 13 western states, came from Chicago especially to be present at yesterday's service.

He came to Utah in 1878, settling in Ogden. Later he engaged in mining, which he has followed up for a number of years, both in Colorado and Utah. ALVIN BEESLEY SELECTED.

With Samuel Holmes and Gustave Forsberg as Bishopric of 22nd Ward.

At a meeting of the members of the Twenty-second ward last evening in the ward meetinghouse on Third North, Alvin A. Beesley was made bishop to succeed Alfred Solomon, who, with his counselors has presided over the affairs of the ward for many years. All of them were honorably released from further activity in the ward. Bishop Beesley selected as his counselors Samuel Holmes and Gustave Forsberg, both of whom are well and favorably known in the ward. The changes are the result of the division recently made in the boundaries of the Nineteenth, Twenty-second and Twenty-eighth wards.
