PUMPKIN VINE MINE.

John Anderson, at his father's death, was left with $150 or $200 in government bonds, $100 or $200 in cash and ten shares of the Pumpkin Vine Mining company stock, then quoted at 4 cents.

This was the condition when John got some of it—a hole in the ground, with a dead, useless lock to the whole thing.

Pumpkin Vine mine should have done better. Alongside of it was a sister mine, the Goldwound, which every one was searching for. One so golden, the other bastardized! Of course, like Bendicks nature, the Goldwound was coy, had a shrinking from familiarity, as miners said. But the very shyness of the mine made the interest in it more intense. It was like a flirtation, getting one out of the Goldwound. To do so was highly exhilarating; made all hands cheerful. What a pity that Pumpkin Vine hadn't been a coquette! But it remained a stalk. Yet it hadn't been blown away when John Anderson became 21 years of age. The serious discovery of the Vine at that date were men of sterling quality and undoubted whims. They fed off good things at other mines, but when they rest, now and then, over the grave of the Pumpkin Vine they supped only on bitter weeds.

At 25 John Anderson had saved by his own earnest efforts enough money to marry and start a home. He had a son 18 months old, for whom he had great expectations in the future.

One rainy afternoon in November he was looking over old papers when he came unexpectedly on his six shares of the Pumpkin Vine gold mine stock.

Anderson attended the annual meeting of the mining company of which he was a small stockholder, held the second week in December. After the meeting the query as to what could be done with the mine came over in John Anderson's mind. He got it to his wife one evening after supper and lay back in his armchair and smiled. His wife was young enough to be foolish and old enough to be wise. The wife's advice was for him to apply to the board of directors of the company to be made superintendent of the mine, to leave her and her child, and, with a gang of sturdy rock breakers, proceed to the drift that rugged mountain, where the mine was, pick, crush and dig until they struck ore, as it were, find out how much of nothing or how much of something there might be in the body or stalk of the Vine.

But who was going to pay for this sort of thing? Where was the money to pay John for going on all fours, work to sold out, and the gang for food to make them brawn, and for rum to keep up their spirits, and for oil for their lamplights, and for machinery, tools, coal and what not? And even so, suppose, after all, nothing was found? Going through a mine isn't easy or cheap, like a Highgarmous going through a mine.

The wife was had a sense which the one lot out. But there was lying in the bank drawing 3 per cent interest $3,000, which John could have for the proposed work to the Pumpkin Vine. John did not know that his wife had had an uncle who had been a sea captain, who had died and left John's wife $12,000 from an estate. This money was held back from John that she might recall it when an occasion happened important enough to unseal her lips.

At the next meeting of the Pumpkin Vine company John Anderson was appointed superintendent of the mine.

One Sunday afternoon the latter part of the following May he stood on the side of a rugged mountain on which lay the Pumpkin Vine mine in a sullen sleep. They were a tough looking lot. Poker Jim, a kind of leader of the gang, who had been recruited at a considerable expense, was considered the foul man of all to scent out gold.

He men stood about silently chewing tobacco. It was a gang sworn to be mum. Poker Jim allowed that he was the man who had said no one of them would go away whole should any break faith. Certain prospecting had led to a well laid plan of assault, and the next day, Monday, the opening work on the mine was begun.

At the end of 30 days John wrote home that if there was any good news it would have to come from the other end of the line. He wrote a letter to the president of the company and told him briefly that there was little to say. He was well, and Poker Jim was not discouraged.

When John had spent $5,500 of his wife's money in the hole, he had his ten shares of Pumpkin Vine stock transferred to his wife's name, which was certainly laudable.

Then there came a storm of wind and snow rain. The Pumpkin Vine mine was flooded. It took three weeks to pump out the mine and it took a big lot of money to do it. It was then near the end of August. John telegraphed his wife that he was down with rheumatism and then dictated a letter to the home office, telling them there that Poker Jim had broken his right arm in three places, but was not discouraged.

John had $1,000 more to drop into the hole; his wife had wired him $2,000 more, the last of the $12,000. Poker Jim was in an ill humor, as his right arm always hurt him now, and John was irritable, for the rheumatism had settled in his knees and ankles. Jim had called John Anderson a "rag," and John had called Jim "blowzy." They had drawn off for a crack at each other when two "wires" arrived from the superintendent and a telegram for Poker Jim.

One of the dispatches to Anderson was from the home office telling him to shut down and close up and come home; to stop at once the whole miserable business! The other was from his wife, saying the child was ill, very ill, and that she was down with grief and anxiety. And there was Poker Jim dancing like one bereft not! Then he gave an unearthly whoop and a shout and rose around in a circle like a madman. While Jim was doing his fling Nasty Jack, a member of the group, rushed up to overcome with emotion that he stammered, stumbled and fell and cried out, "Gold!" Poker Jim's dance ends was from London and informed him that his nearly forgotten father had died and left him a fortune. Nasty Jack's cry of gold meant that the old Pumpkin Vine had yielded again at last.

John wired to his wife to expect him by the first train. He wired to the home office that it was no time to close up when the Pumpkin Vine was pouring forth bullion.

Anderson found his wife and child doing well.

A few months later John had ten shares of the Pumpkin Vine Gold Mine company, which he had transferred to his wife, framed and hung up in the library, for he could afford to do so.

Poker Jim now left for the old country to shed a tear over his father's grave and claim his fortune. Nasty Jack suddenly reformed and is now doing missionary work somewhere in Colorado.—Cincinnati Post.

The Infatuation of Royalty.

I know an accomplished, serious, very intellectual, and very agreeable, woman who, in a throng room or anywhere else when she is in the presence of her queen, becomes a wholly changed being—her face beams with an imbecile radiance, her smile is nervous, her eyes are vacant, her whole person is convulsed with an ecstacy of desire to be suddenly singled out and conversed with by her sovereign; in a wildness, or even tolerable, that one human being should be thus affected by the presence of another? Other acquaintances of mine are in perpetual apparent worship of another sovereign. Where she goes, they go. If she makes a little the outside not kingdom they trip too. They are always within her call and just outside her gates. Of course their fidelity, which is to them a very costly one, gets rewarded by invitation to dinner and luncheon, to weddings and baptisms, and an occasional sipping of tea by royal lips in gracious visits to their own drawing rooms. But this devotion does not prove them from making great fun of the absent person behind her back. Perhaps she equally makes fun of them, and of their eternal pursuit of her, behind theirs. Anyhow the comedy is unworthy and the prostration abjectness. Going on as it does, season after season, year after year, it must produce a baneful effect upon both the idolaters and the idol. If it were chance its effect would be impoverishing and brutifying. Being instinctive its results upon character are, of necessity, ineradicable.—June Forum.

The Czar's Trust in the People.

The czar is said to take much more after his mother than his father. Tsarevitch has already resigned for about eighteen months, but we fear he has wisely refrained from attempting to initiate any startling new departures. What he has done so far has been in the right direction. He has dispensed with the excessive precautions with which the police thought it necessary to guard his person. He has gone to and out among the people as freely as any merchant in St. Petersburg, and one at his first one, on returning to St. Petersburg from the funeral, was to execute the chief of police for issuing an order forbidding the people to open the window or to appear on their balconies while the funeral procession was passing through the streets. Among the signs of a more liberal tendency on the part of the czar the observer noted the fact that he caused the imperial manifesto addressed to the Poles to be amended to accordance with the wishes of the population. When the Polish deputation came to great him he received them with great cordiality, and is said to have declared that it gave him great pleasure to receive them. "He assured I make no difference on account of the religion you profess. My subjects are equally dear to me." The press also was treated by the czar's special request, with a generosity and liberality which previously was unprecedented in Russia.—June Review of Reviews.

At Holcomb, Ville, Arkansas, on June 1, Jesse Chasson was sentenced by a lynching court to hang July 24th for the murder of Pablo Salcido at Morrow, Graham county, last December. Chasson and four associates attempted to rob Paul Becker's store at Morrow on the night of December 17th. Becker had a knife thrust into his side, where it remained until he jammed through a window and ran to a saloon for help. The mortmorning a sheriff's posse had a fight with the robbers. Two of them were killed, two escaped and Chasson was wounded and captured, but before being captured he killed Pablo Salcido, one of the sheriff's posse.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season, but perhaps more generally needed in the spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A proper use of this medicine too often averted long and fatal illness herein. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the material poison. Neuralgia, Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents a bottle. E. C. M. I. drug department.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gundersen, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at E. C. M. I. drug department. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

MUNYON'S COLD CURE.

Colds lead to coughs, coughs to Pneumonia and Consumption; therefore, it is all important to stop a cold before it reaches the lungs. Munyon's Cold Cure will positively break a cold inside of twenty-four hours if taken as soon as the cold manifests itself. When the cold reaches the lungs or bronchial tubes the Cough Cure should be used alternately every half hour with the Cold Cure. The Cold Cure is guaranteed to prevent pneumonia if used in the beginning of a cold. Pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs can be controlled by the use of these two cures.

The Cough Cure positively cures bronchitis, tickling in the throat, hoarseness, loss of voice, soreness of the chest, difficulty in breathing, hacking cough and all pulmonary diseases where the lungs are not too far consumed by disease to be cured with Vitalia.

A separate cure for each disease. At all druggists, mostly 25c a vial.
