EXTERMINATING CANADA THISTLES.

Experiments Made on Tillable Ground and on Blue Grass Sod.

From the experience obtained and from other information gained the agricultural experiment station of the University of Illinois formulates the following as the best method of exterminating Canada thistles when these pests are in full possession of tillable ground: Cut the thistles when in full bloom (July) as close to the ground as possible. Plow about three inches deep and sow millet or Hungarian grass, seeding heavily and harrowing. This may follow the preceding at once or after some two weeks delay. In September plow under the crop or save it for hay, as desired. At all events plow and seed liberally with rye. Plow under the rye in May and seed again with millet or Hungarian grass, or plant to some hoed crop corn and give the most thorough cultivation, with continued watching for and destruction of every remaining thistle. Continue the clean cultivation and sharp lookout for thistles another year.

An infested spot of blue grass sod of about eight rods in area was cleared of the pest without plowing by simply cutting off the plants at or just beneath the surface of the ground with a hoe. Beginning June 17, 1889, this was carefully done once each week until Sept. 21 of the same year. No count was made of the plants first cut, but the 107 plants cut Aug. 12 decreased to twenty-six at the September cutting. During the summer of 1890 the spot was similarly treated the first of each month (once a month only) from May to November. The number of thistles found and cut out each time were in order as follows: 1, 1, 2, 1, 0, 1, 0, which closed the experiments.

"A very striking peculiarity in the development of the plant in Illinois and the adjoining regions," says T. J. Burrill, professor of botany and horticulture at the station, "is that it rarely produces seed. Nowhere is the weed more vigorous in its growth, and nowhere does it spread more rapidly through the soil by its subterranean root stocks, and nowhere are flowers more abundantly formed, but for some unknown reason seed capable of germinating is almost never developed in Ohio, Indiana or Illinois, except in certain restricted areas."

Of Interest to Beekeepers.

"Full sheets of comb foundation versus starters in the brood chamber and surplus receptacles," was the subject of an essay read at a meeting of the International Beekeepers' association by Eugene Secor. He told that his apiarist had for several years used full sheets of foundation in the brood chamber. The advantage was that he had secured all worker comb, and the disadvantage was that it increased the cost of every colony. With the present high price of foundation and the price of honey he was somewhat doubtful about the advisability of using more than a starter in the brood chamber. With comb honey in sections he would use full sheets of the very thinnest and best foundation. In extracting supers he hived full sheets.

A lively discussion followed the reading of this paper. Dr. Miller was asked about wiring foundation, and he replied, "When we wire foundation we have it in the middle, and can handle frames more easily." When a vote was taken it was shown that twenty-eight used foundation and twenty-five did not. The question, "How many use full sheets in brood frames?" showed that thirty voted yes and that twenty only used starters and only three none. A good many others did not know what they did want—that is, they had not settled whether they wanted to use full sheet starters or no foundation at all.

As to the matter of building worker or drone comb without foundation, Mr. Axtell said he uses special colonies. He takes out all the combs and places them build another entirely new set, and by selecting those with young queens he gets worker comb. If they build one or two combs they will build drone cells. Mr. R. Taylor corroborated this. Numbered with questions asked were the following: Can first class honey be produced in sections without separators? A good many answered yes.

What is the best method of preventing bees from sticking the upper stories of hives to the lower ones with propolis? Use close and tight fitting joints. A little piece of grease rubbed on the places of contact will help very materially to keep propolis off.

What shall we do with our swarms of bees when not wanted? "Return them to the old stand," Dr. Miller said.

Is there any difference in color and quantity between honey extracted from light colored combs and that extracted from dark? Dr. Oren answered no. He had used combs fifteen years old, and the honey harvested from them is as nice as that from new combs.—From a Report in Gleanings in Beekeeping.

Short, but to the Point.

Divide the farm work into departments, and make each boy and girl a cabinet officer in charge of one of the departments. A smart girl will make a splendid secretary of the poultry yard.

Coal ashes applied to currant bushes while damp will frequently destroy the worms that eat the leaves.

Swine are natural grass-eaters, and the best meat is produced by those breeds which are known as grassers.

If three-fourths of the dogs had their skins tanned, what a grand lot of mittens they would make. The sheep of this country would be worth a half dollar more per head, and a big lot of pigs could be fed on the same amount of food it now took to fill out those dog skins.

A good way to cure a kicking cow: Take a half inch rope, make loop in end, throw over cow, back of hip joints, hitch up front of leg, and draw tight. No cow will try to kick more than once.

Sometimes the gums of the little lambs when teeth are sore, caused by the teeth not being through. When this is the case cut the gums above the teeth and let them through. Be gentle and careful or the remedy will be worse than the disease.—Farm Journal.

The late General Albert Pike, of Washington, was perhaps better versed in the mysteries of ancient Freemasonry than any other person in the world. His translations from the vedas filled seventeen volumes of a thousand pages each, all carefully written in a beautiful hand. General Pike used none but quill pens in this writing, and carefully preserved each one, the number probably reaching [illegible]

HORSES SUFFER IN SILENCE.

Could They Make a Noise When in Pain They Might Touch Our Hearts.

It is a pity that horses suffer mutely. If they could express their torments by yells as piercing and loud in proportion to their size as, for example, a wounded hare utters, we should soon be enlightened as to the amount of suffering in our streets. Some of the hansom cabs which ply there are admirably turned out and driven, but there are still many whose owners act on the principle of a minimum of corn and a maximum of whipcord. In one such I was traveling one day. The driver plied his whip vigorously about the tenderest parts of his horse's flanks, and awkwardly allowed the lash to strike me across the face.

The pain was acute, and I did not suffer in silence; yet for one incident out that I received in that journey the unfortunate quadruped received scores. He received punishment at the rate of fifty lashes a mile, which, if his average daily task is moderately computed at twelve miles, would give the hideous total of 600 lashes a day.

This incident took place in broad daylight, but some of the night horses are indeed a pitiful class. Nearly all of those that are assembled nightly in Palace yard when the house of commons is sitting are suffering from navicular disease, caused by fast work on hard pavements. You may see the unhappy animals standing with first one forefoot, then the other, pointed forward to relieve the pain, which must resemble toothache on a large scale, for it is caused by the decay of a bone nearly two inches long in the center of the foot. Would society endure horses being worked in this condition if they could signify their pangs as plainly as a fine lady with neuralgia?

The barbarity of tight bearing reins was forcibly exposed and condemned by a writer in June, 1875, and certainly the excessive use of them thereafter became less common, but it is still too often to be seen. It would not be seen at all if people in general understood the peculiar form of torture produced by it. A pair of fat, well groomed, sixteen hands carriage horses standing in the streets are not subjects to attract commiseration from passersby. The restless tossing of their head may be taken for the sign of pride and spirit, but what heart rending groans would alone express what these fine animals have to endure!

Along the top of a horse's neck runs a massive sinew, strong enough to support the leverage of the head; it is attached to several vertebrae around the shoulder; then it runs free over the crest and becomes attached again to the vertebra nearest the poll. When the head is pulled into the position desired by man's vanity, the vertebrae under the crest press hard into the sinew, and must cause intense suffering, sometimes setting up the inflammation known as poll evil.—Blackwood's Magazine.

A Snake and Woodchuck Killer.

Joseph A. Leete, of Guilford, Conn., owns a most intelligent dog which is a cross between shepherd and Newfoundland. Besides being able to perform any number of errands for his master, he has especial antipathy toward snakes and woodchucks and has killed any number of them. He hunts them in the most approved fashion, and when once after either of these animals seldom fails to accomplish their destruction.

Major's snake record has been kept for one year only—1890. He killed during that year twenty snakes of various kinds. His woodchuck record is: 1887, 13; 1888, 30; 1889, 20; 1890, 19; total, 88. He first showed his propensity for killing snakes when he was a year old. He was in his master's carriage, driving along the road, when he suddenly jumped out and ran into the bushes, and a few minutes later came back with a large black snake which he killed. It measured six feet four inches in length.—New Haven Register.

Some Mining Terms.

To "prospect" was to find a spot that looked favorable and make an examination of it. The miner would take a pan of earth, shake and gyrate it under water; raising and tipping it frequently to run the dirt and water off, then plunge it again, and so continue until a small residuum of black sand and gold remained. A speck of gold was the "color," several specks were "several colors," and the number and size determined the judgment of the miner whether he should go to work or move on. I have seen nuggets taken in this way in a single pan, but in the earlier days we counted a "bit" to the pan—twelve and a half cents—a fair prospect.—E. G. Waite in Century.

He Calculated Well.

That was a cool husband in Boston who planned the death of his wife. He bought her a coffin, had her make a new dress to be buried in, bought a rope to hang her with, and was just about to carry out his purpose when an officer broke in and raised an objection. The wife didn't have much to say, as she thought it was her duty to die whenever he said so.—Detroit Free Press.

Brass is an alloy of tin and copper, and analysis of the earliest existing specimens demonstrates that it was formerly manufactured in the proportions of one part of tin to nine of copper. A notice in Genesis fixes the discovery and use of both these metals, according to the Bible, at between 4004 and 1033 years before the Christian era.

Inquiry into the subject of explosions in mines being caused by dry coal dust has led to some very valuable experiments and plans for clearing the galleries of foul air. One of these consists in moving open water baths through the affected localities. The coal dust collects in the water, and the air is thereby cleaned before the danger limit is reached.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost everyone at this season, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities, which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is just what is needed. Read what is said by Mr. C. [illegible], [illegible] Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring tonic, and I recommend it to all who have that miserable tired feeling."

"For years I was sick every spring, but last year took Hood's Sarsaparilla in February and have not seen a sick day since." G. W. [illegible], Milton, Mass.

That Tired Feeling

Is a dangerous condition due directly to depleted or impure blood. It should not be allowed to continue, as in this debility the system is especially liable to serious attacks of illness. It is remarkable how beneficial Hood's Sarsaparilla is in this enervating state.

Hood's Sarsaparilla [illegible] the blood, and imparts a feeling of renewed strength which is comforting and satisfying. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best remedy for that weakness which prevails at change of season, climate or life.

Makes the Weak Strong

"I have been convinced that Hood's Sarsaparilla is one of the greatest medicines in the world. I say this for the benefit of all other tired out, run down, hard-working women. Hood's Sarsaparilla is not only excellent as a blood purifier, but for all other female complaints, even if of long standing." Mrs. M. A. [illegible], [illegible]
