POWER NOT WANTED

Republican Senators Adverse to Assuming Responsibility

OF ORGANIZING THE SENATE.

In the Absence of a Sufficient Majority to Transact Business—Figuring on Utah.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The declaration of Senators Stewart and Peffer render it somewhat uncertain whether the Populist senators or any of their number will unite with the Republican senators for the purpose of securing control of the Senate after the fourth of March. Without this assistance it will, according to present appearances, be impossible for the Republicans to regain control before 1897 or after the next election. Giving three out of the senators to be elected in place of Senators Ransom and Jarvis, of North Carolina, and not counting Senator Jones, of Nevada, as a Republican, they cannot count more than forty-three Republicans in the Senate, and that is two less than will be required for either organization for the transaction of business.

The question has also been raised as to whether the Republican senators will really desire to organize, and some of the older and more experienced politicians about Washington contend that they will not so desire, when they come to look the ground over and weigh the various considerations involved.

The principal reason for this view is the belief that the older and more experienced Republican members will be adverse to assuming a responsibility in the absence of real power to transact business, which they would of course not have unless there were a majority of senators pledged to act with them on questions of party policy as well as upon organization. They call attention to the fact that the House will be composed in a large measure of untried members and it is possible that many of the new men may be disposed to commit the party to a legislative policy which might prove to be unwise, at least unavailing in the face of the fact that the Presidential chair will still be in the hands of the Democrats.

"What then?" they ask, "is the sense of Republicans assuming the responsibility of power without being able to exercise it?"

To do this they contend they must necessarily make some concessions to the Populists who are liable to prove embarrassing. Continuing the argument in this line they say that the fact that the Republicans have not the Senate will prove a check upon the House in case one is needed and enable the cooler members of that body to hold the more radical in, by simply holding up the impossibility of accomplishing anything in that body and pointing out the unwisdom of fruitless effort. On the other hand, the organization of the Senate would give the Republicans no advantage except that to be derived from the acquisition of the offices and the control of committee action.

If Utah elects Republican senators and the senatorial elections in other states now go as the returns from the late election indicate they will, this will give the Republican party an absolute majority and thus definitely settle the question. Or, if either New Mexico or Arizona should elect Republican senators, assuming that there would be no change of program on the part of the Democrats as to this policy as stated at the short session, the effect would be the same. The two senators from either of these proposed states would be sufficient to give the Senate to the Republicans, whereas if the Democrats should secure senators from all of them, they would still be short one of a majority.

GREAT GRANDSON OF A KING.

A Descendant of George IV an Employe of the Western Union.

PORTLAND, Nov. 14.—James L. Ord, a lineman of the Western Union Telegraph company here, has papers and documents proving that he is a great grandson of George IV, King of England.

George IV, as Prince of Wales, married the beautiful and fascinating widow, Mrs. Maria Anne Fitzherbert. The issue of that union could not ascend the throne, because his mother and father were married according to the Catholic rite, and the mother was a devout member of the Catholic church. Under these circumstances the son of this union was a menace to the future king's peace of mind. The upshot was that the son was brought to America, where he died at Omaha, at the age of 85 years. He had seven children, one of whom, the youngest male living, is John S. Ord, of Santa Cruz, Cal., and whose second son is James L. Ord, of Portland, Or.

The flight of the son to America is historical. The documents proving his legitimacy are locked up in Coutt's bank, London, where they were deposited in 1833 by the Duke of Wellington. Proceedings are now being taken to compel the bank to open the papers to inspection. Young Ord's grandfather, on reaching America, served in the United States army during the war of 1812, and was denounced by England as a traitor. A sister of the young man is the wife of S. A. Hunter, a San Francisco attorney. James L. Ord, who now resides in Portland, is twenty-four years of age. He is above the average height, though of solid proportions. He is smooth shaven and handsome. His manners are easy and his conversation quiet and refined.

GENERAL CLAY'S ROMANCE.

Story of the Domestic Ups and Downs of the Old Veteran.

Numerous Obstacles to Overcome Before He Could Marry Little Dora.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 14.—In an interview with General Cassius M. Clay, who married little Dora Richardson, he told the following sensational story:

"Ever since I obtained a divorce from my wife, who, together with my relatives, was prejudiced against me because of my anti-slavery work, there has been a money and determined effort to prevent me from marrying again.

"When I brought home from Russia with me the child who is known as Launie Clay I did not, like other natures, disown my own flesh and blood, but I had my sister adopted and make him the equal of my other children as heir to this vast estate. You will understand that my sister, Green Clay, who was a gallant soldier in the war of 1812, left this vast estate to me during my lifetime, but entailed it to my children. I could have had my life interest until the time of my death, but I loved my children and divided the land equally among them, retaining only this house which I built with my own money, at a cost of nearly $100,000, and thirty-six acres of land. In order to have an annuity sufficient for my wants, I charge the children a rental of $1 per acre per year. They lease it out at from $8 to $12 per acre, so you see I am giving them the benefit of the land, when it really belongs to me until death. This much by way of explanation.

"When Launie was brought here they began a systematic course of poisoning him by giving him some sort of a drug, which produced absolute torpor. This is the reason that he is no larger than you see him now. He is 25 years old and yet he does not appear to be more than a boy. They intended his growth and then to kill him in this secret way, and failing in this, one of their hired tools made that boy, when a mere lad, jump from the second story window of this house, but by the greatest miracle of his life he was saved.

"I killed the man who tried to kill the boy. I shot him twice with my pistol, either one of the shots being sufficient to kill him. The facts were so much in my favor that the courts failed to indict me. Several times when I was on the point of marrying again, they have put obstructions in my way and prevented me from choosing a wife.

"This recent trouble dates back three months. Up to that time, I had in my employ S. C. Moore and wife, who were my overseer and housekeeper respectively. They grew so arrogant that they seemed to think that they owned the entire place, and that I was their servant. Of course I could not stand that. They also circulated stories about me to the effect that I was debauching Mary Lee Bowling, a young woman who assisted in the house work, and Dora, my present wife. There never was a baser lie concocted under heaven. As God is my judge, I never had any carnal thought in connection with that child, Dora.

"Well, they succeeded in inducing Mary to leave and they married her to some young fellow. Had they not lied to her and about her, she would have been living here happily yet.

"They then tried to poison the mind of Dora against me, but in that they signally failed. Realizing what they were trying to do to me I drove them off my place. But they were not to be so easily disposed of. The recruited a band of thirty men among their friends, and they came here to mob me, but when they found that I was on guard, prepared to shoot to kill, they very sensibly left and have never been back on a similar mission. I had my cannon loaded and had they attacked the house there would certainly have been several funerals among them. The house, as you see, is more like a fortress than a house.

"Failing to dislodge me by physical force they informed several of my children that I was going to marry little Dora. This made them furious and they have placed every obstacle in my way possible to prevent it. They retained Judge John Chenault [illegible] to marry me, after I had procured a license last Friday. I then asked Squire Green B. Million to marry us and he promised to do so, but they got wind of that and prevailed upon Million not to have anything to do with me. Monday I suspected that they would come, or cause to be issued, an injunction restraining me from marrying the girl. They thought they had me then where I could not help myself, and that I was unable to help save it from their terrible [illegible]. Accordingly, I determined to thwart their designs, and after it was dark came back last night, I asked Mr. Garland Richardson, brother of Dora, and Harlow Clark, two of my friends, and sent them eight miles after Squire Isaac Newton Douglass. The squire, who is a good Christian, thought at [illegible], and with sympathies with me in my trouble, got up in the night and rode to Richmond that he might be here in time. The ceremony was accordingly performed yesterday before ten o'clock in the morning. Just as the final words were said that made us man and wife, my grandson, Green Harris, and my daughter, Mary B. Clay, who was divorced from her husband and who took the name of Clay and also her son Green Clay, arrived at my gate. I suspected that he had come for the purpose of interfering with my marriage by some order of the court, and I promptly told him to leave the [illegible] and never come on it again until I invited him. I told him that I would shoot him if he came back before I invited him. He left.

"Now, you see, the way I have been treated by those who ought to love and desire my happiness. They have threatened me in such a manner that they have actually made a wild beast of me, and I would just as soon shed the blood of one of the conspirators as to fire on my most deadly enemy, for they are my enemies. But so long as I have my health and arms to I will defy them to the bitter end."

About the Place of Honor in a Parade to Celebrate the Result of the Election.

ELIZABETHTOWN, Ky., Nov. 14.—The first result of the Republican victory in this congressional district was the killing of Rishe Robertson, the eighteen year old son of Thomas A. Robertson, formerly congressman. Last night about 200 negroes and a few white men gathered in the lower part of the town to form a procession. There was a dispute as to whether the whites or blacks should march first. In consequence only one white man paraded. Marshal Neighbors started to examine the negroes' arms, which were concealed. #### MOST FAVORED NATION CLAUSE.

Salt and Beet Sugar from Germany Dutiable.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Attorney General Olney has rendered an important decision, involving the interpretation of the "most favored nation" clause in the treaty between the United States and Prussia. The question propounded by the secretary of the treasury was whether "salt imported from the empire of Germany is dutiable under paragraph 608 of the new tariff act, which provides that if salt is imported from any country, whether independent or a dependency, which imposes a duty on salt exported from the United States, there shall be levied upon such salt the rate of duty existing prior to the passage."

The attorney general holds that salt imported from Germany is legally dutiable. As far as the favored nation clause is concerned the same argument will apply to beet sugar.

Stewart, president of the United States Trust company, said today:

"The circular asking for bids issued by the secretary relieves the government. The government will not have to pay a cent more than 3 per cent for the money. ## A "PARALYZED" PRISONER.

How He Worked on the Sympathy of the Guards and Then Made a Bolt for Liberty.

Salt Lake has the liveliest paralyzed man between the two oceans. His name is Wilson and he is now breaking rock for the city in the foothills above the town.

Wilson was arrested a few days ago on a charge of vagrancy. On Monday he hobbled into court presenting a picture of extreme misery and physical inability. He was better dressed than most of the men who appear before the bar of justice and he gave evidence by his conversation and general demeanor of having mingled in society far above that in which the [illegible].

To the court he told a plaintive tale of woe. He said that he had been paralyzed so profound that everything he had [illegible] had been spent in useless trying to effect a cure. He wound up the story by asking the justice "Now that I have told you my troubles, what can you do for me?"

The court paused for a moment and taking his glasses off the prisoner, said slowly but sympathetically, "Yes, I can do something for you; I will give you forty days in the city jail."

Wilson was removed to his prison house but he did not give up in despair. He still hoped to get away, and when taken to the rock pile on the outside yesterday afternoon he made them believe that he was the object of police persecution and that he was in need paralyzed so far as his left side was concerned at least. He was allowed to rest in a secluded spot. This is how he did it. A short time after he had been allowed to "sit down by himself" he was seen limping up the mountain side like a deer. Guard [illegible] was soon in pursuit and after a hard run succeeded in capturing the "paralyzed" runaway, who apparently was so crippled as an athlete. Today he has been working like a Trojan and laughing at the manner in which he played on the sympathies of the guards who say that the next time they are given the custody of a paralyzed prisoner they will insist that he be compelled to wear an "Oregon" boot.

A NOTORIOUS DEN.

J. C. Duggins, of Provo, and an Unknown Girl Caught by the Police.

The police this morning raided a notorious State street assignation house kept by Mrs. Angell and in their net caught Steve Jones, alias J. C. Duggins of Provo and a young girl who gave the name of Rose Brown, but whose true identity is not known.

The latter declared that she was the daughter of a respectable Wisconsin mother, but beyond that would say nothing. Duggins put up his check for $100 for their appearance in court this afternoon. The check was accepted only after receiving the endorsement of a well known business man of this city.

The guilty couple rode away together in a hack. The girl was heavily veiled and at one time and refused to expose her features to public view. A charge of fornication was lodged against them. Mrs. Angell was also included in the arrest and was required to put up $50 for her appearance in court today.

FROM BEAVER.

Trial of the Bonds Murder Case—Mining Interest Reviving.

Special to the News per Deseret Telegraph.

BEAVER, Nov. 14.—The drawing of a jury in the Bonds murder case occupied the whole time of court yesterday up to 5:15 p.m., when a panel was sworn and court adjourned till this morning at 10 a.m.

A special venire of twenty-five had to be issued before all the names were taken from the box. The taking of testimony began this morning. Only one witness was examined up to the noon recess, showing that the defendant shot Berry in the back and some time after the alleged provocation, not in the act, or at first [illegible]. It seems as if the case would be very lengthy unless something unlooked for happens.

A new mining discovery was made yesterday in the hills southeast of town by James Puller and Jack Jacobs. The samples of ore brought in look well. Indications altogether are promising for a revival in the interest in that business at an early date.

Backman Also Departs.

ACCIDENTS AT PAROWAN.

Robert Dalton Thrown from a Wagon—Child Almost Burned to Death.

Special to the News, per Deseret Telegraph.

PAROWAN, Utah, Nov. 14, 1894.—About [illegible] last night Robert Dalton, a young married man of this place, and son of Edward M. Dalton who was shot here some years ago, while driving down a steep pitch in the canyon some miles from town, without a brake or drag to his wagon, struck against a rock which threw him over the front of the wagon. The two wheels passed over his shoulders crushing him badly but breaking no bones. He was brought home as soon as possible and attended with skill by Dr. Hall, who pronounces his patient on the way to recovery.

A serious accident also happened to the five-year-old daughter of Mr. John Bentley, of Parowan. While out playing near a fire in the yard yesterday her clothes caught fire. The child's aunt heroically fought the flames. In trying to extinguish the fire her own hand and arm were badly burned. The child's injuries are on the back and lower part of the body. She is still in a critical condition, but everything is being done for her recovery, which is earnestly hoped for.

AROUND THE COURTS.

That $25,000 Damage Suit Against The City Railroad Company.

THE "TRIBUNE" WAITS ITS TURN.

Two Depraved Girls of Sixteen and Eighteen Years Appear in an Unsavory Case.

The further hearing of the damage suit begun yesterday, in which John H. Lloyd, a painter of this city, claims the sum of $25,000 from the Salt Lake City Railroad Co., for the death of his little son, John W., on March 15th, 1893, was resumed before a jury in Chief Justice Merritt's branch of the Third district court this morning, the same counsel again appearing—Richards & Richards, Attorneys W. H. Dickson and J. H. Moyle for the plaintiff, and Rawlins & Critchlow for the defendants.

The facts were stated in these columns yesterday. On the date named the child was crossing the street on an errand at the intersection of First South and Fifth West, and when about to step over the rail of a track he stumbled and fell, one of the company's cars passing over his leg; and so mangling it that death resulted in the evening of the following day. In their answer the defendants set up contributory negligence on the part of the deceased boy.

The plaintiff's side of the case closed just before the adjournment of court yesterday afternoon, so far as the taking of testimony was concerned, and this morning Attorney Critchlow moved the court to instruct the jury in the direction of a nonsuit. After elaborate legal argument the motion in his point of view and cited various judicial authorities in support of his application. He contended that the motorman did his utmost to avert the accident and said that probably the child would have passed the track in safety had he not stumbled and fallen. The testimony, he argued, showed conclusively that the plaintiff could not now recover, because the child was guilty of contributory negligence. As to the motor having been out of order, counsel said that at that particular time there was an unusual amount of "electrical disturbance" with the company's cars and the shop was therefore overburdened with repairs. He denied, however, that there was actual carelessness or negligence on the part of the defendants.

Attorney Dickson replied exhaustively on the other side and insisted that the very fact of the defendants having allowed a defective car to go out of the shops was an act of carelessness and negligence.

Attorney Rawlins closed the argument in favor of the motion for a nonsuit, and the matter was submitted to the court just as an adjournment was about to be taken at 12:30.

This afternoon Judge Merritt overruled the motion and Attorney Rawlins thereupon proceeded with his address to the jury on behalf of the defendants. Other counsel will follow in turn and the case will reach the jury late in the day.

READY TO PROCEED.

In expectation that the coast would be clear some time during the forenoon for the calling on of the libel suit lodged by Attorney Arthur Brown against the Tribune Publishing company in the long ago, and the hearing of which had been set down for this morning, the chief actors in the play made their appearance in Judge Merritt's court soon after 10:30. Among these were Editor C. C. Goodwin and Manager P. H. Lannan and the plaintiff himself. The files of the Tribune containing the particular sheet in which the article by which Mr. Brown claims to have been libeled is to be found were also brought in and deposited at one end of the bar table, to be used in evidence at the proper time. But another important case obstructed the way, and it becoming doubtful whether the Brown-Tribune matter would be reached as early as hoped for, counsel, the parties litigant, witnesses and other interested persons successively vanished.

A SHOCKING SPECTACLE.

It is seldom that a more disgusting case of juvenile depravity is brought to light than that which occupied the time of Commissioner McNalty for nearly two and a half hours this morning. The facts were elicited on the hearing of a charge of adultery preferred against a young man of color named George Locie, and have already been shadowed forth in the local newspapers—upon Locie's arrest a few days ago. The girls named in the case were Nellie Gorilan, aged eighteen, and Louis Ford, aged sixteen. The offense was alleged to have been committed with the former, in a room in a tenement occupied by several families including the parents of one of the girls. Both girls most positively denied, however, that any criminal intimacy occurred, but acknowledged that they were intoxicated at the time, and stated that the drink was furnished to them by Locie. On the other hand, Locie met this assertion with an emphatic denial and sought to prove that it was given them by a couple of boys who came to the house with a growler [illegible] and who [illegible] owned [illegible] [illegible] that this was not by [illegible] the first time they had [illegible] the [illegible].
