Chancellor Caprivi's Endeavors as a Peacemaker.

(Standard Special—E. F. Dunnigan Service.)

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—Chancellor von Caprivi has personally attempted to lessen the tension between the cabinet ministers and Herr Hertfurth, minister of the interior. In the course of a conversation on Thursday with seven members of the Right, the chancellor is related to them a sentiment of fidelity to the throne and promised a commission in favor of the agricultural interests of the country, in other words, the pending government measures in return for their acquiescence in local taxes.

He warned them that persistent opposition would create serious difficulties for the monarchy. After the interview several newspapers predicted that a compromise would be effected which would avert a dissolution of the Landtag. Nothing semi-official or definite is related to them, however, is known regarding the matter. A number of members of the old Cartel party recently held a meeting to arrange for the formation of a Bismarck group in the Reichstag and Landtag.

The Catholics sent a communication to Friedrichsruhe stating their formal election of Prince Bismarck for the movement. To this the prince sent a verbal reply through a conservative member of the Reichstag to the effect that he would not prevent members from following his known policy or from claiming authority of his name so long as they uphold his opinions. This qualified sanction of the Cartelist movement is interpreted as meaning that the prince will not at present seek publicly to lead a party, although he is willing to direct their parliamentary operations.

A WEALTHY MILLERITE.

He Wanted to go to Heaven, but Was Disappointed.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—The ninety-foot tower built by Lewis Haskell on his property in Kearney, N. J., in 1845, from the top of which he expected to send his family would be translated into heaven, is about to be removed to make way for the street that is to run through the once handsome grounds. On the top of the tower is built out from the brickwork a wooden wooden platform about eight feet square and four feet high, from which can be plainly seen the Brooklyn bridge, the statue of Liberty and ships sailing on the Atlantic ocean on one side and Newark, Bellville, Montclair and the Orange mountains on the other.

Mr. Haskell was a man of great wealth, and when the tower was built it was generally supposed that it was intended as an observatory. Shortly before May 23, 1843, Mr. Haskell, who was a strong Millerite, announced that according to prophecies of Daniel the world would come to an end on that day. Then it was that his neighbors knew why the tower was erected. On the day mentioned Mr. Haskell and his family arrayed themselves in white robes and ascended to the top of the tower to await the coming. There had she assembled in the words near by a large number of Millerites who patiently awaited the fulfilment of the prophecies, but their hopes were doomed to disappointment and they finally dispersed to their homes. Mr. Haskell afterward turned his attention to spiritualism and was for a time a strong believer in its doctrine. A few years later he removed to Orange and established the beautiful Llewellyn Park.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—The opening of the stock market this morning was a contrast to that of yesterday, being only moderately active and heavy to weak, without excitement. The sugar refineries, while comparatively quiet, lost 1 to 2½. The Northern Pacific common was a strong point in the market, rising one per cent to 29¾ and later everything was brought up to something above the opening prices, the Missouri Pacific being specially prominent, the upward movement showing a gain of 1½. The sugar also moved materially. After 11 o'clock the market was active, but devoid of feature. At noon the market was fairly active, barely steady at about the best prices reached.

FLAGS AND FUNNELS OF STEAMERS.

How the Guests of the Ocean Palaces Must Guess Vessels with Colors.

The cut our lines of transcontinental steamers sailing from this port have, as is generally known, each a distinctive flag and a distinctive manner of painting their smokestacks. Comparatively few know, however, what these distinguishing signs of the great ocean monsters are. When you see a steamer with her funnels painted red, with a deep black band around the top and two narrow black bands below, that is a Cunarder.

The funnels of the ships of the French line to Havre are exactly the reverse of the Cunard line, except the two narrow black bands which the French steamers do not have. The White Star steamers have yellow funnels with a black band near the top, and the Guion line steamers black funnels with a red band some distance below the top. The plain yellow funnels are among the distinguishing features of the Red Star line, but the funnels painted exactly like those of the White Star steamers, except that the former have a red star just below the black band at the top.

On the Russian line the funnels are painted black, with a white band near the top. The Anchor line and the Hamburg line both have brown painted funnels, but the former has a white band, the latter a red band.

Over the Cunard steamers flies a square red flag on which is a golden lion rampant holding two sets of canons in its paws. The Russian line's flag is red with a white lion and in the field the black double eagle. A white flag with a white cross in it is the flag of the White Star line, and the Red Star steamers fly a white cross and charged with a red star. The Guion line's flag is blue with a large white diamond in the center in which is a black star.

A white flag on which is a red anchor is the one flown by ships of the Anchor line, and the North German Lloyd ships fly a white flag on which is blue star a key and anchor crossed and wreath of oak leaves. The French line to Havre flies a white flag bearing the name of the company in red. There are only a few of the many flags which fly over towering and outspreading steamers in the waters of the bay, and of the various paintings of smokestacks which serve to distinguish the ships of one line from another.

At night when these distinguishing features cannot be seen a sound mariner's eye has by learning lights of a peculiar kind, a certain set of colors and gyrations being adopted by each line. Thus if a Cunard steamer should meet another at night and wish to exchange signals she would burn a blue light and fire off two Roman candles, each discharging six blue balls. If the ship she signaled was an Inman steamer she would show a blue light forward and all aloft a red light on the bridge and fire a variegated rocket.—New York Tribune.

The Chinese Item.

A thinking Mongolian of this city gave a new notion when he spoke in this wise:

You Americans often say that the Chinese face has an unpleasant look, and that you do not like the shape of its expression; but perhaps you do not know that we Chinese think the American face has a very obnoxious shape and expression. Our broad Mongolian features are not to your liking, and your narrow features are not to our liking. You do not laugh at the queer looks of Chinese babies any more than we laugh at the queer looks of your babies.

You do not like the Chinese style of dress, and we dislike the way in which American women and men dress themselves. You say our kitchen is behind time out; but tell us how it is better. You think American ladies are pretty and more pleasing than Chinese ladies, but we think just the opposite of that. We believe that things in China are better than things in America, and that the people there are happier than the people here. We come to the country to get money, which is hard to get in our country; but we all want to get back to China when we are to be taken back alive dead.—New York Sun.

Catarrh

It is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It begins a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which works through the blood, expelling the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and which is poisonous enough to destroy life. Catarrh is one of Hood's Sarsaparilla's a remedy for catarrh when other preparations fail.

Stuffed-Up Feeling.

"I will say I have been troubled for several years with foul nasal discharges, dreadful headaches, catarrh. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla with the very best results. It cured me of that condition resulting in my throat and stuffed up feeling. This was before I had my mother, who has taken it for the same state of health and derives benefit." MRS. E. D. SLOCUM, Lynn, Conn.

KIDNEYS.

(Is the seat of the disease.)

A painful disease affecting the kidneys and urinary organs is indicated by a dull pain in the small of the back, or by a sharp, lancinating pain when the patient attempts to lift a heavy weight, or by a dull, heavy feeling in the region of the kidneys, which makes it tiresome to stand or walk, and which is relieved by lying down. But pain in the region of the kidneys is not always a sure indication that the kidneys are the seat of the disease, for it may be caused by a wrenched or sprained muscle, or by a lame back, or by a cold in the muscles of the back, which will be relieved by a Porous Plaster. But if the urine is high colored, or contains a sediment, or if there is a frequent desire to pass it, or if it is difficult to pass it, or if there is a burning sensation in passing it, or if there is a frequent dribbling of it, or if there is a lack of it, or if there is a feeling of lassitude, or languor, or if there is a feeling of nervous irritability, or if there is a loss of flesh, or if there is a bloated appearance of the face, especially the eyelids, or if there is a dull, heavy pain in the region of the kidneys, or if there is a sharp, lancinating pain in the region of the kidneys, or if there is a dull, heavy feeling in the region of the kidneys
