TORREY ENTERTAINS.

Popular Colonel of the Rough Riding Regiment Gives a Delightful Outing.

COMPLIMENTARY TO GEN. FITZHUGH LEE

Colonel Conners, Captain Young and Lieutenants Hurt and Hooper Among the Many Official Guests.

A master hand in the art of entertaining, Colonel Jay L. Torrey, commanding the Second United States volunteer cavalry, popularly known as Torrey's Troopers, fairly outdid himself last Wednesday afternoon. August 24th, says the Florida Times-Union and Citizen, when he gave an excursion up the river to Orange Park, complimentary to General Lee and staff, the generals of the Seventh army corps, and the officers of the Second cavalry.

Colonel Torrey a short time ago entertained, at a delightful banquet, the wives of the army officers staying at the Windsor Hotel, and this time he proved an equally delightful host in entertaining the gentlemen.

The invited guests met at the steamer May Garner at the foot of Main street at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and it was not long before the steamer was one of a gay party and bound up the river. The start was made before dark, in order that all might enjoy the beautiful scenery that is to be found on either side of the majestic river. That the features of the trip was thoroughly enjoyed, of course, goes without saying. With few exceptions, this was the first time that the officers had made this trip up the river, and many exclamations of surprise were heard at the beauty of the scene that was presented. The party had the advantage of a glorious sunset, and then after the disappearance of the bright silvery beams of the moon, played upon the waters, making the scene one of rare beauty. A delightful cool breeze was blowing, the change from the city being most refreshing to all.

Orange Park was reached before 7 o'clock, and here the celebrated Cowboy Band of the regiment, which had furnished stirring music during the trip, was left, while the May Garner continued up the river, permitting the party to enjoy the ride still further. Upon returning about 9:30, the line of march was formed at the long wharf, with Colonel Torrey and his major and brigadier generals in the lead, followed by the invited citizens, and then the other members of the party according to their respective ranks. On shore could be seen the lights that betokened that all arrangements had been made for the party, and upon reaching the end of the wharf the band struck up a lively march, while beneath the beautiful oak trees, from which hung festoons of moss as if placed there in honor of the occasion, was spread a long table, at which the invited guests were bidden to be seated. The place was made to the liking of leading the steamer, Colonel Torrey, of course, occupying the seat at the head of the table, with General Lee, and with Major General Fitzhugh Lee commanding the Seventh army corps, at his right and Major General Kautz, commanding the First Infantry of the corps, at his left, the others ranging down on either side of the table in the order named.

The appetites of the party had been whetted by the trip up the river, and the viands of the "inimitable host" of Mr. Cubera, they were and long in starting the toast.

The toasts were here been both novel and patriotic, as those who listened to, some of the people of Orange Park, had heard of the fight of the Second regiment, early, having assembled to witness the fight. Around the festive board were the distinguished guests of the Seventh army corps, with the officers of the Second cavalry, all clad in full uniform, and the party as spoke of in contrast to the scene that had outlined under the same tree in times past. The moon still hung in the west, and the scene was indeed a fairy one, the dense foliage of the oaks and Florida moss, and it is needless to say that all felt fully inspired to the occasion.

After the usual sentimental things came to cease and cake, cigar coffee and wines, and then liquid refreshments that were conducted to the party in the best of humor. It was not an occasion for speechmaking, but there were some delightful toasts proposed and drunk to Colonel Torrey, to the Seventh army corps, to Major General Lee, and to the Second cavalry. The speech in behalf upon a speech from General Lee, however, and he made a few most happy remarks, referring to his pleasure in having the Second cavalry attached to his corps. Neither was it pleasure for Colonel Torrey to escape, he responded to the toast in a few well chosen words and eliciting the most hearty applause. He said that it would be a proud moment in the life of any of the dismounted cavalry to go with General Lee to Cuba, and he is all him in fulfilling his prophecy when he said some days before Havana: "I go, but I will return again."

Captain Young and Lieutenant Moseley of the Second cavalry also favored the guests with some, both gentlemen having well-trained and cultivated voices. The selection of Captain Young was most appropriate, the words being improvised to the tune of "Marching through Georgia." They are given as follows:

"Up and stick your saddles, boys, and buckle on your gun,
And when you hit the stirrups, let your hearts be light as one.
For they tell us down in Cuba we boys will have some fun
While we go riding with Torrey.

Chorus: Hurray, hurray, the chorus we will sing
Hurrah, hurrah, it's the cowboy's tune to yell.
There's one for every preacher and we know our leader well
While we go riding with Torrey.

"When it comes to riding, boys, our branches are the best,
You will find the western cowboys equal to the test
It's cartridges and guns we want, and we will do the rest,
While we go riding with Torrey.

Chorus: Hurrah, hurrah, etc."

It was 10:30 when the start for the return trip was made, and this was made equally delightful as that going, with music by the band, which had been accompanied of excellent musicians under the leadership of Captain Jack St. Clair. The scenes of the cavalry men favored the guests with numerous sections, while General Lee and the other generals were gathered in the forward part of the vessel, and recited reminiscences and discussed current topics, to the interest of the many officers that gathered around.

The May Gardner touched the wharf again at the foot of Main street about midnight, and many were the hearty congratulations extended to Colonel Torrey on the occasion of the entertainment. As a host and entertainer Colonel Torrey has few equals and no superiors, and those who were fortunate enough to be invited last evening, will ever remember the occasion as one of the most pleasant and delightful of the many pleasant outings that have occurred in connection with the campaign of soldiering in Florida.
